the Post Office.

Dr. Welchans can always be found at his office ready to perform any operation in the practice of Dental Surgery. He treats natural teeth with a view to their preservation and beauty, with the same care and precision which characterized his same care and precision which characterized his preceptor and predecessor, and for which he was so much beloved as a professional man. As a student of Dr. Van Patten's he is perfectly familiar with his mode of treating diseased teeth for which he was unsurpassed. He haserts entire sets of artificial teeth for both upper and lower jaw, with or without artificial gums, and partial sets or single teeth, warranted to be comfortable, useful, and in overy respect satisfactory to the wearer.

He also inserts full or partial sets on the principle of atmospheric pressure.

Submission to God.

The conversion of the soul is the first submission. Before this it rebels, secretly and openly, against God's law. It turns always from God, and Dutchman to dine with them, "I will dine," replied lives in a state of insubordination to him, When he, "thou wilt dine, he will dine, we will dine, you we are told of this in theological language, we will dine, they will dine, we will all dine together." doubt or disbelieve it. The Conjugating Dutchman. We know not where the following story came om; but, as it gives a droll picture of a methodi cal and persevering Dutchman, it may not prove

Two English gentlemen once stepped into a cofee house in Paris, where they observed a tall, odd looking man, who appeared not to be a native sitting at one of the tables, and looking around with the most stone-like gravity of countenance upon dead and the living. The heirs of the defunct preevery object. Soon after the two Englishmen entered one of them told the other that a celebrated Iwarf had arrived at Paris. At this the grave looking personage above mentioned opened his mouth and spake: "I arrive," said he, "thou are and will probably depend upon the evidence as to

I speak," replied the stranger, "thou speakest, he speaks, we speak, you speak, they speak." "How As plump as a partridge—as poor as a rat, is this!" said the Englishman, "do you mean to insult me?" The other replied, "I insult, thou in As hard as a flint-as soft as a mole, sultest, he insults, we insult, they insult, you insult.' "This is too much," said the Englishman; "I will As plain as a pikestaff—as rough as a bear, have satisfaction—if you have any spirit with your As tight as a drum—as free as the air; rudeness, come along with me." To this defiance As heavy as lead—as light as a feather, the imperturbable stranger replied, "I come, thou As steady as time-uncertain as weather; comest, he comes, we come;" and thereupon he As hot as an oven—as cold as a frog, arose with great coolness, and followed his chal As gay as a lark-as sick as a dog; lenger. In those days, when every gentleman wore a sword, duels were speedily dispatched. They went into a neighboring alley, and the Englishman unsheathing his weapon, said to his antagonist, 'Now, sir, you must fight me." "I fight." replied the other, drawing his sword, "though fightest, he | As blind as a bat—as deaf as a post, fights, we fight"—here he made a thrust—"you As cool as a cucumber—warm as a toast. fight, they fight!" and here he disarmed his adversary-"Well," said the Englishman, "you have the best of it, and I hope you are satisfied." "I am gian every box, which is fied," said the Englishman, "but pray leave off the young men and maidens were all on hand; the young men and maidens were all on hand; what is your object, if you have any, in doing so." The grave gentleman now, for the first time, became intelligible "I am a Dutchman," said he "and am learning your language. I find it very difficult to remember the peculiarities of the verbs, and my tutor has advised me, in order to fix them in my mind, to conjugate every English verb that hear spoken. A very curious law case came recently before German Court, arising from the following circumstance:-A gentleman sat at a faro table in the town of Koethen, Saxony, playing with the usual attention and silence. Several plays were made and to put forward, won repeatedly. The gold pushed the card which the gentleman continued unchangingly toward the winner by the croupier, however was not drawn in by him, and after several more accumulations had made the pile inconveniently large, the keeper of the bank rather angrily requested the fortunate man to take in his money. With his eyes fixed on his card, the player took no notice of the request. "Draw in your gold!" was again uttered by several around the table No answer.

"Monsieur! you incommode the other players?" aid the croupier.

The same motionless silence. A person sitting next the offender took hold of his hand. It was stone-cold. The winner was

As the body was being removed, the croupier drew back the money he had shoved toward the dead player, alleging that the game, based upon reciprocal engagement, could not exist between the sented themselves, the day after, and claimed the money, declaring that the winner had regularly commenced and continued the game. The question was carried before the tribunal of Koethen. the point of time when the player ceased to live.
