The Plough and the Sickle.

BY HON. TRISTAM BURGES.

Vith the pioneer axe what a conquest is made What regions reduced from wilderness shade, landed, Their clearing from river to river has spread;

Till now on the beach of Pacific we tread. What a farm for a nation to cultivate now! And gather the wonderful harvest it yields: Tis an empire reduced to the sickle and the plough An empire of gardens, and orchards and fields.

Hail, nation of farmers! rejoice in your toil, And shout when your harvest is o'er: Receive the oppressed to your land with a smile: But flown every foe from your iron-bound shore The plough and the sickle shall shine bright in glory When the sword and the sceptre shall crumble in rust;

nd the farmer shall live, both in song and in story THE WIND.

The wind is a bachelor,
Merry and free;
He roves at his pleasure O'er land and o'er sea; He ruffles the lake,

And he kisses the flower, And he sleeps when he lists In a jessamine bower. He gives to the cheek the maiden its bloom He tastes her warm kisses Enjoys their perfume;
But truant-like, often
The sweets that he sips,

Are lavished next moment

On lovelier lips.

I have previously alluded to this road, but the ore I see and hear of it, the greater importance I garrison is taken, but the bird is flown. Santa attach to the work. It is evidently the great work of the kind in the United States, connected as it will be with the great lines of the West. To this city its importance and benefits, can hardly be over es-It is to connect Philadelphia and Pittsurg, the distance being about 360 miles. The priest. State owns the road, already completed from this finished, and sixty odd miles more to the foot of the mountain will be completed by the spring. There it joins the State postage railroad, across the mountains 36 miles to Johnstown, from which point they are also at work in strong force, towards Pittsburg. The company have leased the road between Harrisburg and Laucaster, and have made an offer to the State to hire from them that between Laucaster and ance with the provisions of the 25th Section of Aviale 16 the Constitution of Popularism that They then will have the entire control of the whole route to Pittsburg, as they only intend to use the State postage road across the mountains, until they can complete one of their own, through a new and lower gorge, which they can travel with the ordinary locomotive, and dispense with all the expensive operations of inclined planes and stationary engines. This road once completed, there will be a continuous railroad from Philadelphia to Cincinnati, by which t is estimated merchandise and produce can be transported at from seventy-five cts. to a dollar per pounds, and passengers at from $12 to $15 .-At these rates it is hardly possible to compute the enormous amount of trade and travel which will come by this route, instead of by the present longer, mere circuitous and more costly canal and lake outes to New York. The passage money from New Orleans to Philadelphia will by this route not exceed $30, and in proportion from Louisville, St. Louis and all the great-west. A railroad will connect this one with Cleveland, on the lakes, and this latter place is 300 miles nearer Philadelphia than New York—whilst the rivers, canals and lakes are frozen, and all transportation towards New York completely interrupted, this road will be in full operation, and will bring the products of the west to market weeks and months before it could get to New York. Unfortunately, it will also seriously affect New Orleans, by draining off large quantities of produce whilst the navigation of the Ohio is inrrupted by ice in the winter, and low water in the mmer and autumn. I consider this one work as of equal, if not of more importance to Philadelphia than all the public improvements in the State, except perhaps in the single item of the coal trade, War was declared against Mexico; and the first War was declared against Mexico; and the first call for volunteers from the state of Indiana, found honest Joe Lane enlisted as a private: but in this humble capacity he was never destined to serve.—

The gallant spirits with whom he was connected knew their man. Many had braved with him the difficulties and dangers incident to a boatman's life, and they knew him to be brave, cool, calculating and they knew him to be brave, cool, calculating and energetic. He was elected Colonel of the regi ment. To command these gallant men seemed to be the height of his ambition; but a higher and more responsible post was destined for him. Indi-ana was entitled to a Brigadier; and before her volunteers had reached the scene of war, the vacans cy was filled, and Indiana had her General. The Previous to the taking of Monterey, Gen. Lane was encamped on the Rio Grande, opposite Barrita — occupying the sloughs and sand hills of Belknap. This position was unhealthy, and the career of many gallant spirits was cut short by death and disease. General Lane visited General Taylor at Matamoras, and earnestly requested that his command might be removed about twelve miles above.

At the close of the war he returned home, and entered again upon the duties belonging to his farm. Again his country calls him to a most important cost—he shrinks not, and as a Governor of Oregon, he immediately repairs to that distant land, ready to shield with his brave heart, from the brutal knif of the savage, the homes of the American emigrant. Time passed, and Lane is no longer Governor. His friend is dead. The administration that appreciated his merits and knew his worth, has long since vanished away, and the man who refused the honest wood chopper of Indiana a healthier camp for his sick dying and soldiers, on the banks of the Palo Alto, is occupying in luxurious idleness, the White House at Washington.
