Persons should insure their lives, and do to without delay, whilst the are healthy and fit subjects to be insured. In this Office there are advantages greater than have ever yet been derived from the system of Life Assurance; which reason and experience convined the Trustees may with safety be offered to the the Trustees may with safety be onered, to the public. It will be found, on inquiry, that most offices have in the outset professed to act on some new principle; or to offer to assurers some one particular benefit not to be obtained from other societies. But policies are effected under various circumstances, and with widely different objects, circumstances, and with widely different objects, and what may facilitate the views of one man, affords no accommodation to another. It appears, therefore, to the Trustees of the Equitable, that the greatest good will be effected by that office, which allows such reasonable advantages to every assurer, as at the time of completing his Policy, he considers to be suitable to his particular case. On this principal they are and a few instances will considers to be suitable to his particular case. On this principle they act, and a few instances will suffice to show the benefits derivable from its adoption—the greatest good of the greatest number No policy will be disputed, unless under an act of fraud by the assured, and after the same shall have been declared by referees of undoubted character. In case of error, either as to age, or in the form of policy, or the answers of referees, such errors, unless wilful and fraudulent, will not be errors, unless wilful and fraudulent, will not be deemed to vitiate the policy.

The travelling leave is extensive and liberal. Persons insured for life have liberty to pass to and from the States of Virginia and Kentucky, and west of the river Mississippi, between the first day of November and the first day of July following. And to pass from any place or port within the British North American Colonies, or United States north of thirty-four degrees north latitude, without pay. ing an extra premium. They are allowed to cross the Atlantic in first class steamers during May, June, July, August and September, free of charge; during remaining months of the year, 25 cents on each $100 insured.

Lancaster, Pa., June 9, 1848.

Doctor William Steelling:—It affords me great pleasure to state to you that Phave used your Pulmonary Syrup with great benefit for Coughs, Pain in the breast, and Bronchitis. It is about one year since I begun the use of it. I consider it the best article I know of for those complaints, having derived great benefit myself from it in those affections, I have no hesitation in recommending it to all who I have no hesitation in recommending it to all who labor under similar diseases. I have also given to my little son with great advantage.

Dr. Wm. Steelling:—I take pleasure in informing you that I have been greatly benefitted by the use of your Pulmonary Syrup. I had contracted a very severe cold, and with it a violent cough, so that I would sometimes spit blood; in this condition you found me when you gave me a bottle of your Syrup, I had not taken half a bottle before I found myself much relieved, and in fact felt like a new man. I would recommend your Pulmonary Syrup to all who may be afflicted with colds or any other diseases of the lungs.

Testimony of a well known Merchant of Williams town, Lancaster county, Pa.:

Dr. Wm. Steelling Dear Sir:—It affords me much pleasure to inform you of the great benefit I have received and also in my family, from the use of your Pulmonary Syrup. I have used it for Catarrh on the Breast, and from a very few doses have been relieved. I have also found it a certain the medy for the Croup and all common coids. I have sold it at my store for four years and could give a great many instances of its success in all diseases of the Lungs and Threat.

NOBLEMEN.

BY C. D. STUART.

The noblest men I know on Earth
Are men whose hands are brown with toil;
When, backed by no ancestral graves,
Hew down the wood and till the soil,
And win thereby a prouder fame
Than follows king or warrior's fame.

God bless the noble working men,
Who rear the cities of the plain;
Who dig the mines, and build the ships,
And drive the Commerce of the main;
God bless them! for their swarthy hands
Have wrought the glory of all lands.

Hearts and Homes, sweet words of pleasure,
Music breathing as they fall,
Making each the other's treasure,
Once divided, losing all;
Homes, ye may be high or lowly,
Hearts alone can make you holy,
Be the diviling care as small. Hearts and can make you noily,

Be the dwelling e'er so small,

Having love it boasteth all.

Hearts and homes, sweet words of pleasure,

Music breathing as ye fall,

Making each the other's treasure, Once divided losing all. Hearts and Homes, Hearts and Homes!

Take a little wife, The prettier the better, Pat her check, and when

Keep her in the house, There she'll cook your mutton; Darn your jacket, too,
If she's worth a button.

BY L. A. M., OF BALTIMORE. "Clara, Clara," said Charles Lefever, an enter ising merchant, to his young wife, "it is the first leisure evening I have had to spend with you since you have had your new piano, and have never heard the sound of it. Come, touch the keys and accompany it with your sweet voice, and it will be music such as angels might pause to listen to. "I cannot sing to-night, Charles," said Clara, "I

"No! it was not exactly that Charles," replied his wife, "though I do sometimes fear I make an idol of my child, and that God will punish me by to beware of idolatry, lest it should be found like a taking him from me; but it was of poor Emma Welling that I was thinking, and contrasting her

"She does, indeed, expect too much," said Clara, at least more than it has been her happy destiny to receive the tender, affectionate attentions of her susband towards her and her child. What would Emma not sacrifice to purchase one such evening's pleasure as I now enjoy? Aye, one hou in the social enjoyment of her husband's company

"One of Emma's temperament, Charles," said Mrs. Lefever, "requires something more than to be well fed and clothed to render her happy. I can look upon any sorrow, but a pale, uncomplaining heart broken woman, who has idolized her husband and found that idolatry a bitter cup; it alway " Mrs. Welling expects too much perhaps, Clara, said Lesever, smiling pleasantly, "you know you ladies are sometimes said to be so unreasonable nd expect a man to work miracles. As a friend Welling, I have enumerated what he has done for the comfort of his family, and now allow me to ask what he has not done?"

And now, in order to answer Mr. Lefever's questions, and to show the reader what Mr. Welling had not done, we will introduce him to them. one but a scholar could comprehend the extent of d before him life opened its glorious vista with brothers, and seemed bound to them by more than common tie. With what pride and exultation awhile to soft dalliance, and bend his haughty spirit to woo a gentle being whose very softness and weakness are charms in his eye; but when the object is won his sympathies are not with them; the delicacies and sensitiveness of her nature are not in unison with his bold and daring deeds—the lover vanishes and the man is himself again. This Emma Welling was fitted to now a to work to wo Tower valuences and the manus nimsell again. In a Emma Welling was fated to prove to her unavailing sorrow. Her husband worshipped fame and courted the applause of millions. He was chosen, by his countrymen, to fill high offices of state, the halls of government reverberated with the echoes of his eloquent voice, but the soft tones of affection were seldom heard in the social circle. Wherever he moved a crowd of admirers followed, a nation's love only could satisfy him; his mind was too lofty to descend to the sweet softening influences of domestic endearments, the budding charms of his beauteous boy were overlooked in his aspirations after honor and renown, and the pale young wife found the very talents that had so won upon her affections the prolific causes of her heart consuming affections the prolific causes of her heart-consuming disappointments. Her love was idolatry, and her heart was wrung with silent wretchedness as the penalty. The bitter thought came home to her that she was not beloved with that devotion which she had expected from such a man as Welling, and beneath this depressing idea her health became impaired, and her life wasted gradually away. It was not a cheerful spirit Clara, because of a cheerful spirit Clara, because it was not a cheerful spirit Clara.

for she was of a cheerful spirit, Clara had, on the evening of the above conversation, adjusted her household concerns and was preparing to retire early when the bell was heard to ring violently and early when the bell was neard to ring violently and hurriedly, and she was summoned to attend the dying couch of her friend. Making herself ready as hastily as her painful emotions would permit, she set out, accompanied by her husband, who, whenever she was disturbed, mentally or bodily, whenever she was disturbed, mentally or bodily, was ever by her to console, and, if in his power, to relieve. She found the physician with her, but without any hope that his efforts would be successful, and too soon his fears were verified. She faintly breathed out the single word "Newton," the name of all on earth to her most dear, and the once lovely, highly-favored and universally envied Emma was no more. was no more. A messenger was despatched with all speed to Washington for Welling. He was shocked; for, in his gay career, he had never paused to reflect that Emma could die At the crowded levee, in the fashionable assembly, he had talked of her, had praised her beauty, grace and accomplishments. He was proud of her because every one admired her, but with her and his home no fond associations were connected. The summons came unexpected, as it would have done had it been delayed for years. Obeying the call with all the precision and consistency with which old time moves his annual round, he left the gay metropolis and the scenes of enchantment that bound him there, and reached his elegant residence on the day that the funeral rites were to be performed over the remains of his accomplished wife. He stood by the silver-mounted coffin and looked upon her death-frosted countenance and went over the sable mantled child, showing that he was as graceful in manited child, showing that he was as graceful in tears as he was persuasive in eloquence and ardent in science. They bore her to Mount Auburn, that green-arched home of the dead, where goes up in grateful incense the perfumed breath of flowers, and where the song of the birds linger in holy sanctity with their hallowed memories. A CHARMING STORY. One of the editors of the New Orleans Picayune, in a recent article on the moral culture of the affections, relates the following pretty story: In the course of our peregrinations, we were once introduced to a family consisting of a widow lady and two daughters. The elder was about wenty, and exceedingly interesting girl, well edu cated, and of considerable personal attractions. In the general demeanor of the sisters there was a striking contrast: the youngest was all gaiety, with a transparent candor on her features that enabled you to ead her very heart. Every word, every move, of the elder, evinced some predominant idea —that she habitually "chewed the bud of bitter melancholy." What that idea was, in a young sirl, of course every body might divine. After a time, little intimacy having sprung up between us and the widow, the cause of the melancholy ldest daughter was explained to us. She had been brought up near a family where there was a youth of her own age, and a reciprocal affection was the result of long years of intimacy between them. The mother only became aware of the state of he daughter's feelings by the demand for her hand made by the lover. The position of the young couple was such, in regard to worldly affairs, as to render their marriage imprudent in the extreme. The widow, therefore, pointed out to her child all the evil consequences which it would entail on her and the latter, like a sensible young woman, con' curred in the mother's views. It was then agreed on between them to remove from the scene of danger, and the family accordingly established them miles off, where we first saw ves at a spot for them, the young lady promising to hold no correspondence with the gentleman.

Circumstances shortly after called us to another part of the country, but about nine months subsesurprise, we found the widow with the youngest daughter only; the elder had left her home forever. The explanation was readily given us. It appeared, that, notwithstanding every effort on the part of the young lady, the passion she had conceived for the companion of her infancy could not be eradicated. Her gloom and despondency daily, hourly increased. She uttered no complaint, but it was plain that memory,"like a worm in the bud" preyed on her young heart. Riding one vening in a carriage with her mother in thee outskirts of the village where they lived, whilst the latter was endeavoring to rouse her from her mel-ancholy, by descanting on the beauties of nature, nly broke from her torpor and exclaimed-"Look, ma, at yonder oak alone in the middle of that ploughed field! I would rather be Morton's wie, and live upon acoms beneath that tree, than be the bride of a prince!"

Struck almost speechless by her daughter's unaccustomed energy, the poor widow looked at her moment, and burst into tears. "Do you really mean that, Hetty? Then, as there is a living God, you shall have him! I am too much of a woman not to understand you, and will no longer oppose your wishes.

The two were in an instant locked in each other's arms, weeping tears of love and gratitude.— They returned home instantly; a letter was forthwith addressed to the lover, and the wedding of the young couple was duly solemnised, within a month rom that day,
