NEVER HOLD MALICE.

BY ELIZA COOK.

Oh! never "hold malice," it poisons our life, With the gall-drop of hate and the night shade o Let us scorn where we must, and despise where we may, But let anger like sunlight go down with the day.

Our spirits in clashing may bear the hot spark, But no smouldering flame to break out in the dark; 'Tis the narrowest heart that creation make, Where our passion folds up like the coils of a snake. Oh! never "hold malice," it cannot be good, For 'tis nobler to strike in the rush of hot blood Than to bitterly cherish the name of the foe-Wait to sharpen a weapon and measure the blow. The wild dog in hunger—the wolf in its spring—Are less to be feared than the vengeance of man, When it lived in secret to wound when it can.

Oh! never "hold malice;" dislike if you will, But remember Humanity linketh us still; We are all of us human, and all of us erring, And mercy within us should ever be stirring. Shall we dare to look up to the Father above, With petitions for pardon or pleading for love; Shall we dare, while we pant for revenge

To ask from a God, yet deny to a brother? ----

Thus ran my dream, continued Harry, and it has left a strange foreboding on my mind that some for sixteen years a vision has haunted me, stuck has nearly drove me mad. 'Tis my ignus fatuusmy evil star, and worse than all my fixed doon to

She, young, beautiful, and the fairest one of all; too pure too holy for a creature of this world. She, fit to dwell amid scenes for angelsshe was not formed for this earth. No har seat is she was not formed for this earth. No, her seat is in Heaven! And this pure being has placed her virtue and love in my hands. I strove hard for the prize Tho poor and despicable as I am, won it. Fortune so ordered it that I would be compelled to take a foreign station, or none, and as I had no other resource than my profession 1

Mary, dos't think I require anything to bring thee to my memory? No. Mary. no. It requires nothing to remember thee, so long as that monitor love reigns within my breast -Harry, oh that we had some means of communicating our feelings to one another during your absence. True, you can write; but still how long the time will be, ere I hear from thee. Harry, you are going to face danger, perhaps death. Could my prayers avert the blow, it would never reach thee,

Yes, Mary, let me be always remembered thy offers to our God. For heaven knows how much I need them; for when in the heat of battle, man forgets his relation towards his fellow, excitement blinds compassion; all is chaos-one feeling reigns, to be victorious. Oh! Harry, that thy path led in a less dangerous direction; but as it is, I fear I will lose thee. Here there came a cry, shrill and then mournful, to our ears. Twas a warning, so I thought. At that moment I became unnerved; I felt a sickening, deathly feeling creeping over me; I turned and looked on Mary; she was standing gazing silently on the water; she was nale as death. I spoke one word-Mary! and as the name ve thrilled upon the air, she raised her hand and pointed to that star. "Twas dimmed-a veil was cast o'er its beautiful light, and it seemed sorrowing at my doom. Mary raised her eyes to mine; they were filled with tears. I silently took her hand and drew her closer to me, and said Mary, fear not. 'twas nothing; but silly fancy dictated this alarm. And now, Mary, I must go; 'tis near the time for my departure. I offered my hand-twas accepted, and clasping her in my arms, and with a voice choking with emotion, I said my farewell. Alas! bitter word, what a pang it cost me to pronounce She, with her cheek resting on my shoulder, breathed her farewell in my ear. One kiss, one last embrace, and I tore myself from the spot.

Here the shrill cry of "sail ahead" came from the maintop, disturbing our conversation. We were at our posts in a minute. Harry hastened down to the cabin and summoned the Captain. He was on deck in an instant, and hailed the maintop with "where away." Two points on our lee bow, was the answer. Haul around and give more room, Quartermaster, was the next order given.-Lay in that top sail, cried the Lieutenant through his trumpet. Boatswain, pipe up hands for action. Then followed orders which I will not tire you with. I was standing by the Captain; Harry was leaning over the railing of the quarter deck. The Captain and Lieutenant were conversing a few rods from him; every man to his command. Be steady and cool, brave and discreet, and we will win the day, cried the Captain. We were nearing the enemy fast—we were now within a long shot of them. Sir, why are you not at your post? said the Capt. speaking sharply to Harry. Sir, (touching his cap,) I feel a little indisposed; the spell came on ne very suddenly, replied Harry.

This suddenly is very often an excuse from ac tion, I believe, said the Captain. Harry turnedsnatched up a cutlass, gave the Capt. an iron look. and hastened to his post.

Education and refinement by her smile broke in upon the demure circle c tronly married and single friends, and drove dull care away; flying then to other groups, they seemed touched as by a magic wand, and joy sprang up around her everywhere. But night will turn to day, though Eva Maurice presided at the revel and woo its longer stay. Aching heads and half oped eyes, greeted the noon day rising of many of the past evening's revellers. One young man was there, the only son of a rich Southern Planter, who came to the city to attend the Medical Lectures, for which it is so justly celebrated. He brought letters of introduction to the Maurice family, and We walked often in the evenings together—our favorite haunt was a little cliff that overlooked the village inill, a large body of water lay beneath our feet—a clear glassy stream—and gave a true our feet—a clear glassy stream—and gave a true reflection of the moon's calm, lovely face. Romance in Real Life.

There is quite a spice of romance connected with the Chilisquaque marriage, published in our Hym eneal record this week. The groom, who now works at the boat yard here, was formerly a seafaring man. The bride is from South Carolina: and r father, and her former husband, both of whom have been dead many years, were wealthy planters. me five years ago, the young widow made a visit to England, in company with her brother, a south-ern gentleman of fortune, and on the return voyage they embarked in a vessel in which the groom w serving as a common sailor. By some accident, she was knocked overboard in the harbor of Liverpool, sank to the bottom, and was given up for lost.— Our hero, however, did not abandon the search. A slight change in the position of the vessel, discovered her, the water being remarkably clear, lying on the ground, twenty feet below the surface, and apparently dead. He instantly plunged to the bottom, seized her by the hair and brought her to the top; a large lock of hair being pulled out in the attempt and which is still preserved. After some hours of persevering exertion, she was finally brought to, and perfectly restored. She was deeply grateful to the preserver of her life, and on homeward voyage she formed a strong attachment for him, and a union for life was resolved upon.— Their plans were, however, frustrated, and for several years they never met. In the meantime her fortune became impaired. Some three or four months ago she heard of his location here, and im mediately came on from Charleston to see him.— Her uncle, however, overtook her, and carried her back. She came on again, some three weeks ago, ut was confined to bed for some time by sickness Recovering on last Sabbath evening the long de-ferred nuptial knot was tied, and the rescuer and escued are now united in a life partnership, for better or for worse.

This is true of the whole country, so far as mining and the acquisition of wealth in this way is concerned. In the early period of the discovery of the gold region, he admits that large amounts of money were realized by the persons who were fortunate enough to be there.
