THE STOUNG ASPIRANT FOR FAME. Upon a time, an ass was seen To strut about in Lion's skin, A cunning lad, and rather smart, He practiced long deception's art, Until, alas! he turn'd about, The skin was mov'd, his ears stuck out, His master now observed the trick And beat him till the lad was sick.

An ass is famed for want of knowledge, And so are some who've been at college So frail is form'd the human mould, (As we have oft before been told,)
The man of genius in his windom Has often known it to be his doom, To tread the path among the hills With those but fit for Cotton Mills

Friend J. I pray do not despair If I have juck'd thee from thy lair, Or squar'd thee with "mechanic's skill." ve planely seen I meant no ill. You'll prosper yet as poets ripe, Or paint a true daguerrectype, Your talents good and full of merit, Cramp not such genius in a garret.

Don Quixote, sir, a sight most rareish Don whose face is bare. I think 'twould be at least material That he should have a small imperial.
Our critics now with turned up nose in small moustache and flashy clothes, Attempt to pass as their bright lore The lines they've robb'd from Scott and More

We've one bright youth that may be seen To strut about in fine nankeen, A foreign lad of great renown, Whose partly stranger to our town,
the struts about—naught else to do, But see that poets are tended to, He may be known in streets or lanes, his fine clothes, and shallow brains

Ye critics all, what e'er-vour ills e be doomed to Cotton Mills or practice the daguerrean art, pray you play a critics part; Don't waste your spieen to please a jack, For if you do, I fear, good lack! Will get the trouble for your pains, Your waste of ink and loss of brains

THE SCHOOL MISTRESS.

BY MRS. E. M. SEYMOUR.

"The school ma'am's coming, the school ma'am's coming," shouted a dozen voices, at the close of a half hour's faithful watch to catch a glimpse of our and hour's faithful watch to catch a glimpse of our thing. Miss Westcott says I can, and Lam determined the most scrutinizing glance—for the children as I was astonished to observe the effect that Miss the most scrutinizing glance-for the children as well as others always form an opinion of a person, particularly of their teacher, at first sight.

I was astonished to observe the effect that Miss Westcott's treatment of Tom had upon the schol ars; they began to consider him of some import-"Oh. don ' How tall she is!" exclaimed one. sne 100K sweet? cried another. "Ho, I ain't afraid of her, nor a dozen like her," cried the "big boy" of the school. "Nor I either," cried the big boy's ally," "I could lick her easy enough, could niv you, Tom?" Miss Westcott at once comprehended his whole character, and began to shape her plans according-She maintained that a boy, who at 12 years old made himself feared among his school-fell was capable of being made something of. He Tom Jones had not been brought up, he had come up, because he had been born into the world thoroughly drubbed, (he could'nt get Sam into that and could'nt help it; but as for any mental or moral training, he was as fruitless of it as a wild moral training, ne was as fruitless of it as a wild bramble brush of a pruning knife. Tom Jones went home that night with a new present condition, and becoming something greater and better than he then was. His mind became inundated with new and strange emotions, and like a mighty river turned from its course, his thoughts and energies from that hour sought a new direction.

The next morning he was up with the dawn, and when Miss Westcott arrived at the school house she found Tom Jones there with his ever-

"I have brought a hammer and some nails," said Tom. "I thought we should need some." "Yes, so we shall; I am glad you thought of it," replied Miss Westcott.

That day every scholar looked amazed to see Tom Jones actually studying his book, and to hear him answer several questions correctly, and they were still more confounded, when at recess Miss

When school was out more than half the scholars were out of the window before half the schools with the door, wondering what Missa Westcott could be going to say to Tom Jones. He had often been bid to remain after school, but it was always to receive a punishment or severe lecture, and nine times out of ten he would jump out of the window before half the scholars were pose that he was to remain now, and no one won- was always assisted by Sam; and Joe would, in a where he died could not well refuse the customary where he died could no; well refuse the customary refreshment of liquor upon an occasion like this, three idle hangers on of the establishment readily consented, to honor the obsequies of Dirk by the usual vigil. The dead man in the mean time was duly laid out; but the distorted shape which his body had assumed in the death agony, made it necessary to use great force in straightening out the corpse, and recourse was had to cords to bind down his limbs to the decent form it was desirable they should assume. The disagreeable task being ac complished, the three friends of the gambler, when night came on, took possession of the apartment where he was laid out. With characteristic recklessness, they had brought a pack of cards into the chamber of death, and after taking a glass of liquor all round, and drinking the memory of their com-rade with some unfeeling allusion to his sudden fate. the three profligates sat down to a game of cards upon the foot of his bed. Four hands were then dealt, that of "dummy" falling almost upon the feet of the corpse, and the other three upon the opposite sides and extreme end of the bed around which the players were thus arranged. The gam proceeded apparently to the satisfaction of all par-ties—each of them by turns playing the hand of dummy" until drinking and gambling had carrie hem deep into the middle watches of the night.some slight dispute, occurred, as to who should play the next dummy.
