A SONG. BY A. M. M****. My soul is sick ! my heart is dark,

With every thrilling chord unstrung; And not a nerve but bears the mark Of how it hath been harshly wrung. Then bring no bird of spring to thrill Its songs of hope and joy for me; My heart must be forever still Pro it can wild a burble its Ere it can yield or broken be.

Go, bear that mournful harp away ! soul would burst to catch one tone And thoughts would gush too dark for day If I but heard one plaintive moan Then, minstrel, leave me, leave me here, To grapple with my silent fate; Perchance there'll come some gentle tcar, Like dew, to moisten gloom and hate. The dreamy words breathed out in song Are not the words of actual pain Rut voiceless thoughts, corroding long ! Will burn like fever in the brain. Then leave me here! I cannot speak, I cannot give a voice to grief— I only wish my thoughts to wreak In tears, for tears can bring relief.

The Old Churchyard Tree. A PROSE POEM.

There is an old yew tree which stands by the wall in a dark quiet corner of the churchyard. And a child was at play beneath its wide spreading branches, one fine day in the early spring. He had his lap full of flowers, which the fields and lanes had supplied him with, and he was humming a tune to himself as he wove them into garlands. And a little girl at play among the tombstones crept near to listen; but the boy was so intent upon his garland, that he did not hear the gentle sourceps, as they trod sottly over the fresh green grass. When his work was finished, and all the flowers that were in his lap were woven together in one long wreath, he started up to measure its girl, as she stood with her eyes fixed upon him. He did not move or speak, but thought to himself that she looked very beautiful as she stood there with r flaxen ringlets hanging down upon her neck. The little girl was so startled by his sudden move ment, that she let fall all the flowers she had collected in her apron, and ran away as fast as she could. But the boy was older and taller than she, and soon caught her, and coaxed her to come back and play with him, and help him to make more garlands; and from that time they saw each other garlands; and from that time they saw each other nearly every day, and became great friends. . Twenty years passed away. Again he was seated beneath the old yew tree in the churchyard. It was summer now; bright, beautiful summer, with the birds internet and the duration. with the birds singing, and the flowers covering the ground, and scenting the air with their perfume. But he was not alone now, nor did the little girl steal near on tiptoe, fearful of being heard. She

The summer is gone: and the autumn, and twen ty more summers and autumns have passed away since that evening, in the old churchward.

A young man, on a bright moonlight night, comes reeling through the little white gate, and stumbling over the graves. He shouts and he sings, and is presently followed by others like unto himself, or worse. So, they all laugh at the dark solemn head of the yew tree, and throw stones up at the place where the moon has silvered the still upon his soul. He closed his store, sold his

But the silence of the churchyard is now broken by a voice-not of a youth-nor a voice of laughand ribaldry. It is winter, with a roaring wind and a thick grey fog. The grave n the churchyard is covered with snow, and there are great icicles in the church porch. The wind now carries a swathe of snow along the tops of the have attained a few leaves to each, plant them into a rich piece of ground in the garden, about twenty inches apart. The second season they will produce fruit to prove their merits. The seed is obtained by drying the ripe fruit and washing the flesh from the seeds, which are all on the outside of the berry; there seeds, which are all on the outside of the berry; there seeds when whether the set was not determined to the wasp, and there set when we have the main and mizen-mast of the Wasp, and there set when we have the whole graves, though the "sheeted dead" were at some melancholy play; and hark the icicles fall with a crash jingle, like a solemn mockery of the emly mirth of one who is now coming to his final rest. There are two graves near the old yew tree, and these seeds, which are all on the outside of the berry; these seeds, when perfectly dry, will keep three years. Flowers that have an entirely green cen-ter are called female, or pistilate—those that have a great many yellow stamens are called male, or barren plants—those that have only a portion of stamens around the base of the green, conical centhe grass has overgrown them. A third is close by, and the dark earth at each side has just been thrown up. The bearers come: with a heavy pace they move along; the cofiin heaveth up and down, as they step over the intervening graves. Grief and old age had seized upon the father, and stamens around the base of the green, conical cen-tre of the flower, are called staminate or perfect blossoms. Stil.—All admit that the best soil for this fruit is a deep, light, rich, loam, if not naturally dep to be made so by trenching. Rich it must be, if large and good fruit is required : therefore, prepare the ground the season before, planting and incorpora ting it with an abundance of manure, to the depth worn out his life; and premature decay soon seized upon the son, and gnawed away his vain ambition and his useless strength, till he prayed to be borne not the way yonder that was most opposite to his ather and mother, but even the same way they had gone-the way which leads to the Old Churchyard Tree .- Dickens' Household Words. of eighteen inches. A statement has been going the rounds of th papers in regard to an immense hammer made in Liverpool, and recently brought to this country, to be used in an iron manufactory in Connecticut, weighing some 14,000 lbs. Although this is undoubtedly a great piece of mechanism, we are able to state, says the Albany Argus, that a still greater work has been made and in use in this State for several vears

There is a steam hammer at the Kemble Foun dry, at Cold Spring, Putnam county, opposite West Point, which weighs eight and a half tons, or 19,040 lbs., which is something more than "about" 14.000 lbs. This immense instrument was made at the works where it is used. Under its persuafluence large masses of wrought iron are thrown into the shape of shalts for steamboats and steamships of any size, from two hundred up to four thousand tons burthen, if necessary. Other articles of heavy weight are made to take any form desired by the manufacturer; and notwithstanding rosity, they are handled with the same fa cility that a blacksmith handles a horse shoe withal indry covers about lour acres of ground, and from five hundred to seven hundred men find the swelling of the fruit. A plantation will last constant employment in it. All manner of cast three or four years; and to have this fruit in periron work is done there, such as bed plates of fifty tons weight, for steamships, in one solid piece.-Paixhan guns, water pipes of all sizes, columns for buildings, and in short, everything, large or small, in the casting line. Steam engines, of all sizes and descriptions, are also made there, and placed on board by means of proper machinery on the dock near the works. There is now in progress of con-struction at these works a steam cylinder sixteen growing States in the Union-the recent crop has been very abundant. The Detroit Advertiser says The harvest is over-the prospect of Michigan for a full treasury from her late golden fields, placed beyond a peradventure. The surplus wheat from this State will, in the opinion of experienced farmers and millers, double that of any preceding year. This may seem extravagant; but not a few men whose judgment is deemed valuable, express that opinion. The quality of the berry is, in general, excellent; and the yield of flour will be also large in proportion. Corn has recuperated wonderful within thirty days, and now bids fair to yield hand somely. The fears which were produced by the drouth of May and the early part of June have thus been happily dissipated.
