I thought of my meek, gentle, and affectionate sister, with whom was spent so many hours, and those hours; though passed in the chamber of sick-ness, constituted the happiest of my young life.-None could but be happy in that dear one's pres-ence; for she, in all her sufferings, was so uncom-plaining, so pious, so heaven-like. Then came the dark side of the picture. Oue morning I rose from my couch and hastened to that sister's room; my parents and the servants were there; with surprise, I noticed they were weeping. The dying one spoke--- "Brother, I see you once more--Jesus has called --meet me, with Father and mother, in the bright land I am going to." Her lips still moved, but no sound came from them; one moment more, and she was-dead. For long months after, I wept for

Then came another scene. The time when 1 bade farewell to all to go out into the worldthe stage of action to labor for myself. I heard my Father's well known voice, "God bless thee, my son!" My Courtship of an Arkansas Girl.

Reader! if you have ever lived or travelled much in the State of Arkansas, you must have remarked the women are not of the ordinary stamp in regard to personal courage and spirit. Their very natures seem imbued with the greatness and th pride of the created things that God has placed around them. When I first went there, I was made acquainted with as fine a specimen of woman-of Arkansas women-as you ever saw. "I came-I saw," I loved her, and once thought I had "con quered" her. My visits were frequent to her, and generally up till a pretty late hour of the night.-Her mother—as fine a lady as you could wish, but rather large in dimensions-slept in an adjoining room, the evening to which I wish to refer, (espe cially.) Log cabins are not very compactly built, and sounds can be easily distinguished from one room in another. Betty, for that was the name of my sweetheart, had reciprocated my ideas on cer-tain points, to my content, and I had resolved to start home. Taking out my watch I expressed surprise (as I always did), at the lateness of the bour. She said she way the lateness of the She said she knew it must be late from the

I was going to say more, but I did'nt, stranger, for as true as gospel there was Bet making right at me, with her fist ready for the attack. I ain't no coward but I can't fight women, so I just incontinently sloped. I never have lorgotten Betty, and I love her yet, but I dars'nt go nigh her since that unfo unate night,
