The Death of Dora.

CHAPTER FROM COPPERFIELD, BY CHAS. DICKENS The following is one of the most touching chap-ters in the current story by Dickens, entitled "Da-vid Copperfield." It gives an account of the death of the young heroine's pretty, "child wite," and is of the young heroine's pretty, "child wife," and is and send her up to me; and white I speak to her of the young heroine's pretty, "child wife," and is let no one come-not even aunt. "Here, then, is a seal for your letter !" And with these words, she threw a cord suddenly around the neck of the old man, as he lay in his bath, and sprang back to strangle him. Weak and terrified, he could offer but feeble resistance, and soon lost responsibility rests on him who ventures to substi-tute in the treatment of so grave a disease, a new onsciousness. One of the dismissed slaves had tealthily returned, and found her struggling at th cord, and exclaiming with the rage of fury : this way. In ordinary treatment of Pneum would know all! know more, then! Write, no to your master ! write now, old fool !"

At these vociferations and the chokings of th victim, the slave fled, spreading the alarm with cries of terror. Some of the servants rushed into the streets with the dreadful news, and others hur ried to the bath room, where the old eunuch, drag-ged from his bath, had fallen senseless on the marble floor. Deliberately unloosing the cord, the mis tress calmly and silently walked through the terri fied crowd, and gained her own apartments. The eunuch had been a kind old man to the servants, and their distress at the frightful scene before them was unbounded. Every possible effort was made to restore him, but in vain. He rallied for a tew moments, summoned strength enough to reveal the circumstances given above and died with the words on his lips.

All the vast city of Constantinople was aroused with electric rapidity by the news. Crowds rush ed to the place, and, spite of the high rank of guilty woman, the cadi ordered her to prison. A courier was despatched to London with the intelligence, and she will remain imprisoned, and the affair uninvestigated farther, till his return. The criminal, to all questions addressed to her, proudly sserts her right to the life of a slave, an no other attempt at palliation.—Semaphore de Ma seilles.-
