the Louisville Journal of Caturay a NCEX: THE FUNERAL.—The mortal remains of Major General Zachary Taylor, late President of the United States, were yesterday deposited in their last resting place. The hero, the patriot, the warrior line of the digit the barried end of the function tombed in the burial ground of his fathe and in the memory of a grateful people. He, who three years since, at the head of the armies of his ry, was shedding by his victories an imper e glory upon the name of Americansfour short months ago was at the head of the na , winning golden opinions by the integrity Administration—lies now low in the dust be seen no more amongst us-to be known hereafter ly in history. In the memory of his patriotis all true Americans should find motive for an in and the Atuericans should non motive for an in-creased love of their country; and that Union which he, while living, had resolved to protect with all the power at his command till he should spend his last energy in its behalf, let all those henceful energy in the behalf, let all those dly cherish and more religiously reverence who entertain a grateful recollection of the services he rendered his country.

Attended by Col. Taylor, Judge McLean, and Col. Bliss, the body of the deceased was yesterday morning, at an early hour, delivered to the civil morning, at an early hold, derived to derive the term authorities of the city, By pre-arrangement, the military, the fire companies, the Mayor and Council, and the citizens met and formed in procession on Jefferson st., opposite the Court House, and pro ceeded thence down Sixth street to Main, up Main Fifth down Fifth to Water, and up Water to Strader's wharf, where was lying the steamboat Navigator, which had brought to this city from Pittsburg the body of the deceased. Upon the reception of it by the city authorities, Governor Crit nden, who has been amongst us for a few days, said, on behalt of the corporate authorities of the city, addressing himself to Cols. Taylor and Bliss. that the people of Kentucky felt a just pride that the family of the deceased had selected the soil of this Commonwealth as that in which the ashes of the deceased should repose, and he was sure he might, in their name, say that the grave of departed patriot would be hallowed by a reverence only equalled by the affectionate regard with which Gen. Taylor has been regarded by Gen. Taylor has been regarded by the people when living. No hostile bands would ever tread upon turf which covered him, but his sepulchre would the turl which covered him, but his separate would re pair to meditate upon the life and character which had won high renown for bold achievement, and had been especially celebrated for the practice of deceased might be committed to their charge. This done, the coffin was lifted to the hears ver which was thrown our national banner, and the procession commenced. The military preceded, the herse followed, and after it came the civil authorities, the fire companies, and the citizens gene-rally. In this order they proceeded to the city limits, whence the hearse proceeded, attended by those who had it in charge, to bear the remains of the deceased to their last resting place. The immense crowds that lined the streets through which lived, a true Christian. the procession passed, attested the emotions felt by all classes of our citizens on the mournful occasion. From the city limits the body was attended by a large number of persons in vehicles and on ho back, to the burial ground, lying northeast of the city, and distant about seven miles. This place of his interment was selected by General Taylor. It is upon the farm formerly the property of his father, and sill owned by the heirs of his deceased brother, Hancock Taylor, Esq. McDonough, the Millionaire.

The New Orleans papers contain many particulars in relation to John McDonough, the eccentric millionaire, who recently died of cholera at his residence opposite that city, in the 71st year of his age. His estates are variously estimated, at from tive to fitteen millions of dollars. His real estate is very large, is distributed in all parts of Louisiana, besides a large amount in New Orleans, the yearly rental of which, amounts to about two hundred thousand dollars. Except the latter, however, his property is unimproved. The N. O. Bulletin says: "Some ten years since he consulted an eminent lawyer of this city, to know whether he could not place the whole of his property in the hands of trustees, to accumulate for three thousand years, (we make no mistake in stating flowsand gens, (we make no mistake in stating flowsands and not hundreds) and then to be distributed among the poor of that distant generation, unless indeed all generations should have been previously swept away, and the millenium be come and over gone in the mean time. The Picayune says---

To his relations, who were quite poor, he preserved a severe and studied coldness-only relievserved a severe and studied coloness—only reliev-ing their poverty by the most meagre contribu-tions. Of enterprise, the spirit of public improve-ment and progress, he was as destitute as the old planks of his house were of sap. Owning immense property in the city, he left the greater part of it entirely unimproved, until/his possessions became a great nuisance to the corporation. When induced a great huisance to the corporation. When induced to build, he would only erect the roughest and most unseemly buildings, usually put up by his slaves, who brought the bricks with which they were made across the river. Many of these buildings are now eyesores in our city, tenantless and dangerous from their dilapidated condition. So too of his immense excent in the country. But a senal portion of it property in the country. But a small portion of it was in cultivation. He usually bought tracts of land by leagues and miles, instead of acres. He was said to own fifty miles fronting on the Missis-sippi, in Louisiana. Four-fifths of the swamp land in the State belonged to him. He had, too, imnense possessions in Florida, Mississippi, and xas. The area of his property would equal that one of the small States of the Union, and exceed that of several of the Kingdoms or Principalitie of Europe. The preservation and administratio of this immense property must have required a vast deal of labor, and great administrative talents.— These Mr. McDonough possessed. He was well educated, wrote very well, understood the law, and was quite familiar with the history of the country."
