COMPOSED BY TAUBERT, AND SUNG BY JENNY LI Translated by Mr. C. Rosenberg. Birdling! Why sing in the forest wide?
Say why! say why!
Call'st thou the Bridegroom or the Bride?
And why? and why?
"I call no Bridegroom—call no Bride;
Although I sing in the forest wide,

Birdling! Why is thy heart so blest? Oh say! oh say!

Music o'erflowing from thy breast?

Oh say! oh say!

"My heart is full, and yet is light,

Birdling! Why sing you all the day?
Oh tell! oh tell! On tell! oh tell!

Do any listen to thy lay?

Oh tell! oh tell!

"I care not what my song may be,
Now this, now that, I warble free;
Nor know, yet must be singing."

HENRY MORTON.---A TALE. "He led her to her nuptial bow'r,

The mournful sequel of my tale. How changeable is man; how inconstant and nfaithful; and how liable to be led into temptation; which alas, too often proves his ruin. Into what a multitude of vices do we daily see our fellow beings led astray; in what a variety of dark and thorny paths do they wander; but of all the vices into which man ever fell, there is none which can surpass the vice of intemperance. It deprives many a father of a promising son, and renders him odious to his friends, and to society. It deprives the fond and loving wife of an affectionate hus band; and renders him an unkind parent, an unteeling husband, and a pest to the community at large. How many have and what he might have been. How many have per-fallen on the field of battle; how many have per-ished by the infectious breath of pestilence; but how many more have fallen victims to that monster intemperance, who, like a giant, is walking with majestic strides through our land and making the young, the active, the virtuous, its prey. Henry Morton and I were school boys; we were brought up, as it were, together, and our hearts were firmly joined to the ties of juvenile friendship. His father was a respectable farmer, who by many years of persevering industry and economy, had amassed a small but competent fortune. Henry was his only son; the idol of his heart; and his only happiness consisted in seeing his son happy.

At an early age he was sent to school and soon passed through college; he was young, accomplished, and handsome, and bid fair to become a blessing to his friends, and an ornament to society. Caroline Johnson was the daughter of a respectgentle flowing river, the green fields and the sented itself. In one corner upon a pallet of straw lay a child apparently in the last agonies of death; and bending over it stood a haggard female form, beautiful and happy. In another corner gathered around a few decaying embers, stood a number of small children in tatters; while through unnum. This state of things was intolerable.

gone; and oh! dearest friend, how all is changed. Henry has forgotten his yows, and the once tender and affectionate husband, is now become a mon-ster. Here she closed her short but painful tale; while the tears started from her mild blue eyes; and ran in torrents down her pallid cheeks.— Where is he? (exclaimed I,) I know not, (replied she,) as I have not seen him since vesterday. Just at that moment the door opened and two men en-tered bearing in their arms the dead body of Henry Morton, who a few hours before had sell from a wagon in a state of beastly intoxication, fractured his skull, and in a few moments afterwards was launched into eternity. duty which they owed to the deceased. An aged and venerable man whose head was whitened by the frosts of seventy winters, read the service; a hymn was sung, and the customary rights per formed, when the bodies were conveyed to an ad jacent field where one grave was prepared to receive both. They were placed side by side; when the unfortunate widow took one last look of her child and husband. Just then I approached the child and husband. Just then I approached the child and husband. Just then I approached the compliments to his old friends, and respectfully invites them to come and see him at spot and beheld the once gay and happy Henry Morton pale in death. His once sparkling eye was sunken and bloodshot; and his bloated face was overed with wounds and scars. I sickened at the sight, and turned round and cast a glance at the in-fant. A sweet smile played upon its serene countenance, its cheeks which were once of the richest crimson, were now of an ashy hue; its little were pale and livid; and its eyes were closed by heir long silken eye lashes; while its glossy rave locks curled around a forehead which might vie for whiteness with the marble of Paros. The bodies were lowered down into the earth. —— I heard ries occasioned by that monster intemperance, exclaimed, O! thou vice of vices,—thou "serpent with seven heads and ten horns," when will thy reign cease, and thou be cast down. Then, and of till then will the widow cease mourning, and ie orphan dry up her tears.
