They say that Thou art Poor.

They say that thou art poor, Louise; And so I know thou art;
But what is wealth to noble minds,
Or inches to the heart?
With all the wealth of India's mines
Can one great deed be bought? Can one great deed be loought.
Or can a kingdom's ransom bring
One pure and holy thought?
No, vain your boasted treasure,
Tho' earth to gold is given,
Gold cannot stretch to measure
The love bestowed by Heaven!

They say that thou art poor, Louise; And so I know thou art; But why should lack of sordid pelf But why should lack of sordid pelf Thrust thee and me apart?
The pearls that sparkle on the lawn
Our jewels bright shall be;
The gold that frets the early dawn
Shall fill our treasury!
Ask you the proudest minion!
Whom gold gives rule o'er earth,
Doth not our broad dominion.

Out-beggar a'l he's worth 3

We'll rove beside the brook at eve, When birds their vesper song : Of gentle truth and guileless love To woods and winds prolong;
And from the morning's jeweled cup
Such healthful draughts we'll have
As never met the fevered lips
Of fortune's gilded slave.
Could Lydian Croesus, dearest, As wide a kingdom sec As the fairest realm thou hearest Belongs to thee and me !

I know that thou art poor, Louise; And so indeed am I;

The Baltimore Sun, of Tuesday last, has the fol lowing graphic detailed account of the recent disaster to the steamer Ohio, during the tremendous gale of the 22d and 23d ult. It is from the pen day, we would up the water from a depth of about of B. MAYER, Esq., of that City, who was one of fitty feet in the hold, by the four ash buckets which gale of the 22d and 23d ult. It is from the per the passengers on her voyage from Havana to were replenished continually by a man below who filled them as they descended. In a little while it

Sunday, the 25d, rose fairly, with a smooth sea and a fair wind from the southwest. At 11 o'clock. our townsman, Mr. John Gibson, read the service of the Protestant Episcopal Church and nearly all the passengers, uniting in worship, closed it with a psalm. In the afternoon the breeze freshened, and our observation at noon showed that we were off Cape Hatteras, whose dreary winter storms are proverbial. At sunset, the wind still continued fair and freshening; but, with every hour, it increased, until ten oclock, when we were forced to scud before the gale, hoping to get round the Cape, whilst the ship was steadied by the action of her engine alone. Thus we drove on before the storm until two o'clock. By this time the tempest had raised the reach the reach storm until the control of the storm until the control of the storm until the st reduced wind, bulling into a fresh but favorable breeze, would waft us safely round the stormy Cape into smoother water. Suddenly, however, the engine stopped on its centre!! In a moment, our immense vessel "branched to," with a tremendous shock. Every thing that was loose in her cabins, state-rooms, and saloons were dashed to pieces; and surging from side to side with every lurch added to the frightfulness of such a scene at midnight on the stormy sea, amid clouds and rain and darkness!

But our brave captain and his officers were alert as soon as the power of the engineers was no longer available. Straining every effort, they got what ever fore and alt sail they could on the ship, and "hove her to," whilst the single engine was again fortunately set in motion. But the battle between the storm and human energy was not ended.— Scarcely had the canvass been stretched, when the aiter sail, which was most important in steadying so large a ship at such a moment, was shivered to atoms and blown in ribbhns from the bolt ropes, like so much cambric! The beating of the loo tackle, the rolling of the unmanageable ship, the crashing of the waves, the howling of the increasing wind and rain, continued thus uninterruptedly until towards daylight, when the alarmed and be-wildered passengers crept from their berths and rooms to learn that the barometer was rising once more, and that the squalls were not so violent. Meanwhile the engine continued to act, and surgod the hull forward sufficiently to preserve steerage and to keep the ship out of the trough of the sea,

The morning of the 23d was dreary enough, even with the hopes that had been renewed by the lull steward, of all the large number on board, appeared n the cabins to offer refreshment to those who need. ed it after, their painful vigil. The lull of the wind from the southwest proved, however, to be only prelude to another storm of equal violence from the northwest. As the day advanced the wind rose again, and, creating a cross sea, rendered the ship uneasier and more unmanageable. At nightfall our hearts were sick with anxiety, for we were now aware of the fact that such sails as we possessed could do nothing for so huge a vessel as the Ohio, and that our sole reliance was on the perfect, uninterrupted action of our crippled machinery! No cooking had been done, and a slight ration of crack ers and tongue was all the refreshment obtained during the day. The impudent or cowardly servants of the ship skulked, and it was difficult to obtain even a glass of water. All of us in the cabin, how ever, strove to keep up the spirits of our various parties, and the ladies manifested as much fortitude in resisting the idea of ultimate danger. The pro-minent feeling of the breast of all was that of anxious suspense, and not of dread.

So passed the temptuous night of the 23d, during which I noticed that the Ohio had evidently become more unsteady, and that she was certainly buried in the trough of the sea, wallowing without the control or power of control by the helmsman. Wearied as I had been by watching all the 22d, I went to my room about 3 o'clock, and, bracing myself on my trunk, against the side of the berths, slept until daylight. When I returned to the upsaloon. I found it crowded with anxious faces and when I spoke, as usual, in cheering teems to the ladies, telling them that all would be well, and that the increased rolling of the ship was doubtles caus ed only by the abated wind, I was taken aside and informed in a whisper that the crew had been free ing the ship from water all night, and that the rising flood within her timbers had extinguished her fires in the furnace beneath the boilers. I confess that I was, for an instant, appalled; but it was only for an instant. I thank God for the hopeful temper which made my soul rebound from danger, and, in a twinkling, renewed my spirit. I felt sure that such a ship was well provided, and that, with a crew so numerous, strong, and energetic, she could not be left to sink among the waves. In an hour the news came that the water still gained, and, in a few minutes, the gallant Schenck appeared in the cabin and with a firm but serious face announced that he could not get sufficient men to work, notwithstanding the awful peril of our condition. There was a moment of silence; and I broke it by exclaiming that, if he had not men in his service to free his ship, he has passengers in his cabin who were ready to save her. Sir," said he promptly, " your service and examband of fifteen or twenty rushed up the companion way, and, scrambling along the rocky deck as well as we could, advanced towards the places where we expected to find the pimps in action !—
Yet, what was our surprise when we learned that there were at least four feet water in the hold, that there was not a pump in the ship fit for service at that moment, and that the only mode of rescue was by drawing up the water, by crank wheels, in four conner bucket, designed in ordinary times, to concopper bucket, designed, in ordinary times, to convey the cinders and rubbish from the furnace room beneath! The engine pumps could not work be cause the fires were extinguished; the hand pumps were out of order, and the forward rump was repairing as rapidly as possible.

I wrought at the crank of one of the cinder buck-ets for about half an hour, drawing up a bucket full of about twenty-five gallons; on an average, every four or five minutes. I remained on deck as long as I could hold on and work. The pitching and rolling of the ship, from side to side, the dashing of the spray, and occasional parts of rain. poured into our faces and over our persons by the fierce winds, wearied and benumbed us. We were soon drenched with water; and, foodless as we had been for two days, were not equal to so great a task Yet none of us thought of death or danger. Our only idea was of work, and our only prayer for the continued capacity to work. As I clambered along the deck, back to the cabin, holding on by every bolt and bar I could clutch to prevent being pitched overboard by the rolling ship, I stopped awhile to look at the sea. There was something ferociously grand in its aspect. Above was the cold gray sky, like the lid of a leaden coffin. As we lay in the trough or hollow beneath the waves, two majestic mountains of dark blue marble, streaked with frothy veins, towered on either side. For a moment our huge hull reposed in the valley between them, and as the snowy crest of the windward wave combed over, like a cataract, threatening to engulf us, the gallant craft slowly raised her tall side and allowed he serge to pass beneath her feet. But the wave had its revenge for the ship's contempt, for as it rose to leeward, it sent the vessel tumbling and groaning down its other slope, until she sank once more to the momentary quiet of the watery valley. With each of these serges, while on deck, I trem-bled for the ship's safety, when I saw her so completely at the sea's mercy, and thought of the sun-dering strain that must necessarily be produced by the tall iron chimneys in her center, each one of which, as it swung from right to left, seemed to act like a gigantic lever thurst into the vessel's midst, striving to wrench her in twain.

When I got back to our cabin, I found that the experience and admirable judgment of our brave townsman. General Benjamin C. Howard, had suggested accomplished the prefer page 1881. gested and accomplished the perfet organization of The General went to work promptly with paper and pencil:—pledged every signer to work unflinchingly; divided the men into sections of twenty, five of which went to work at each crank in bailing out the water; and regulated the hours of each division, so as to afford sufficient repose and comfort to all. Schenck rallied the spir its of all by pronouncing the plan one of confident success. The first division immediately relieved the watch on deck, and thus, throughout the whole was discovered that the organized labor of the fresh responsible passengers told upon the water. It evidently decreaser, and after due search, the leak was detected, and found to have occurred faom the breaking of the flange from the supply pipe which fed the boilers from the sea. The aperture was reached with some difficulty, by crawling in among the machinery, and was closed by packing and railing target captures agrees the rest. ing tared canvass across the rent.

Meanwhile the divisions wrought unceasingly and cheerfully, especially when they heard that the depth of water in the hold decreased, and that the engineer reported his probable ability to re kindle the fires, if we only continued to work steadily.—By this time, too, the fore pump had been got into service, and for awhile, a small upper steam engine called "the doctor," had been set in motion to aid in freeing the ship. "The Doctor," however, was two o'clock. By this time the tempest had raised the sea, and the waves swept up like tall hills be fore us. The steamer, stripped off every rag of canvass, climbed them gallantly, while every one who witnessed the scene hoped or believed that the trial data and trial data a before morning the gusts would abate, and that the were again reduced to the main reliance, on the ash buckets. In the c descried, and our flag hoisted with the Union down; but the stranger either did not see it, as it drifted flat to leeward, or thought it useless to approach us in so tremendous a sea At dark, on the 24th, the water had been great.

y diminished, and the engineer was reported to be in good spirits. Our gallant captain snatched a moment now and then from the deck, to visit the moment now and then from the deck, to visit the carrin with a cheering word or smile, and Howard circulated among his divisions, encauarging them as nobly as did his brave ancestor on the battle flelds of the Revolution. Yet, when night closed in, and the cabin lamps were lighted, there was scarcely a being in the saloons, who, for awhile, was not made very silent by the memory of the day and hour. It was Christmas Eve! Yet what contrast with the wonted scenes of home!-Wives, parents, friends, warm firesides, peace, contentment, rose before us. Merry little faces, laughng, gay little figures, dancing around the lighted pranches of the Christmas tree! We thought of the thousand hearts that were beating with hope to be re united on the morrow with the sinking dwellers in that ship. We felt that those many eyes might behold us no more forever, and that a violent, a dreadful death, would perhaps leave no single remnant of the foundered ship to tell the tale of her destruction. Fortunately, however, duty gave us no respite for reflection or brooding moodiness. Probably no one failed to offer a silent prayer; but never was a band of strugbling men more nobly sustained by mutual confidence, courage, endurance or sympathy.

Scarcely had the sun set when the gales, which lasted, with hardly an intermission, from the night of the 22d, began to abate their violence; and as they fell the sea fell with them. The working par-ties continued their Jabors all night long, snd as they wrought the waters decreased in the hold.— Abont midnight the chief engine was enabled to re-kindle his fire and raise the steam; but when he set the machinery in motion at day dawn on the 25th, the engine was found to take only half a revout last hope, notwithstanding the subsidence of the sea and the appearance of an approaching calm, for the vessel had been so long strained and racked by the religing that now with a subsidence of the sea and the appearance of an approaching calm, for the vessel had been so long strained and racked by the religing that now with a subsidered that the religion to the religion that the religion tha racked by the rolling, that now, with every motion her timbers groaned and cracked, as it another swell would sunder them completely. At six o'clock I went on deck'and found the day fair and promising. The tempest was over. The sea was comparatively smooth. A brisk breeze blew from the southwest, and " a sail " loomed up on the horizon. In the momentary doubt as to whether the engine could again be made to work, our flag was hoisted with the Union down and signals of distress repeatedly fired. The schooner on perceived us and began to beat towards our ship; but before she got nearer than three miles our engine had entirely cleared away all the coals and cinders that choaked the action of the engine and had produced a perfect revolution of the steamer's wheels. You may imagine the cheer that went up from the crowded deck as the Ohio once more shot over a mooth sea, and ceased to crack and groan and la or in its engulfing waves. Silence succeeded that theer, for all were anxious to express their tratitude to God and to entreat a continuance of he promised mercy.

Sad as had been the Evé, the Day of Christmas, 1850, was perhaps the most joyous that will lever be past by most of the voyagers on the Ohio.— The sea continued calm though the wind was fresh and fair. Our crippled and strained engine was not pushed, but was aided by all the canvass we could crowd on the ship, which was now, at our could crowd on the ship, which was now, at our own solicitation, as well as according to the judgment of our captain, directed towards Norfolk, Va. An observation in the morning and at noon, showed us to be about 85 miles distant from Cape Henry, but by the aid of wind and steam we were before night fall well in under the lee of the land in ry, but by the aid of wind and steam we were be-fore night fall well in under the lee of the land, in smooth water. After dark the wind again fresh-ened to a brisk, ugly gale, with a dirty and lower-ing sky, and in my first watch of two hours for bailing water, I feared that we might again be for-ced to "lay to," as the officer of the deck found it necessary to strip the ship of canvass. After mid-night, however, as we drew closer to land the wind lessened, and when I came on deck in my second ple will have the best effect;" and immediately a watch at two A. M., I found the sky as clear as At four I went below and to bed for the first time in four nights, and slept delightfully until I heard t announced that the light-house was visible and CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, SATTINETS, VEST our pilot boats in sight.

Culture of the Sweet Potatoe. I have noticed two or three articles in the Gene see Farmer on sweet potatoe culture in this State. I have raised sweet potatoes several years past with good success and very little trouble, as a luxury for Four years ago, I purchased in Cincinnati some dozen potatoes of the red variety, grown in Louisi anna. Near the last of May, I cut them open length wise and covered them about an inch and a deep in a hot-bed, the flesh side or raw part of the potatoe downward. At evening, I poured boiling water over them, and repeated it again the next evening. In a few days the shoots appeared, and, when from 4 to 6 inches in length, I pulled them off (by placing one hand on the potatoe and using the thumb of the other to pull them off.) and planted them in hills in my garden. I proceeded in the same way with every new set of shoots, until near the last of June.

The season was remarkably warm and my handful of seed yielded an abundant increase. I never saw finer or larger potatoes in Mississippi, and they far exceeded any any I ever saw in Tennessee or the south part of Ohio: Some of them were enormously large. I sold some of them for one dollar per bushel; but they were mostly used in my fam-ily and given to my friends. I would here remark that the vines do not die, like the common potatoe, but remain green and apparently growing until frost comes; and, whenever the vines are touched with frost, the roots are affected, and soon rot. lost a part of my first crop from not knowing thi fact—letting them remain too long in the ground.

The next spring a friend sent me, from Cincinnati, a box of sweet potatoes of the yellow variety which I treated in the same way, and had a fin crop of large potatoes, some of which were exhibcrop of large potatoes, some or which were callu-ited at our county fair. The next spring I pro-cured seed from a genteman near Erie, Pa., who has cultivated them for many years, and keeps the seed through the winter. I had a fair crop, as regards quantity, but they were inferior, both in size and quality, to those grown from seed brought from the South. They were hard and stringy, while the others were exceedingly farinaceous. I am induced to believe that, when raised long from seed grown at the North, they will run out, or so nearly as to be hardly like sweet potatoes.

In the spring of 1849, I got seed from Pittsburg
—red, yellow and white varieties. They all grew well and produced abundantly. The red ones were much the largest, and next in size were the yellow

All persons in the western part of the State who own a garden of rich, warm soil, may have their patch of sweet potatoes if they choose. They should never be planted until there is no dange from frost-from the middle until the last of May is quite early enough. The hills should be about three feet apart, and care should be taken to prevent the vines from taking root, the consequence of which will be a quantity of small fibrous roots, not fit to eat. A good way is to collect them in a cluster on the top of the hill. One shoot is sufficient for a hill.—Cor. Gen. Farmer.

Pandemonium of Felons. AN ORIGINAL, THRILLING AND TRUE HISTORY.

OF an extensive and powerful confederacy of marauders and murderers, which but a few years since swept the whole valley of the Mississippi, as with a blasting sirocco of crime, is now publishing in the NATIONAL POLICE GAZETTE.

This startling narrative is from the graphic pen of the editors, is collated from official documents and other authentic sources, and entitled the BRIGANDS OF THE WEST.

BRIGANDS OF THE WEST.

In this history the reader is introduced to crime in all its terrible phases. The secret councils of desperadoes, in the lone log-cabins of the boundless forest, are exhibited in vivid colors, their, mode of life and hair breadth escapes described, their plans of operation developed with minutenes, and their deeds of blood and atrocity, which spread terror throughout the whole western part of the nce, on the asn a sail had been union by terror throughout the whole western part of the as sail had been tunion, portrayed with fidelity. The whole complete union down; prises an intensely exciting episode of the daring it, as it drifted to approach us terror throughout the work with the week edding December 1. Justice. The National Police Gazette is published eyery Thursday morning, the week ending December 7th, contains the four first chapters of the work, in which will be found an account of John Long, THE HUMAN PRAIRIE WOLF. The "BRIANDS OF THE WEST" will be continued weekly in the National Police Gazette until finished, and will form the most wonderful and interesting work ever published in this immensely popular journal.

Still far ahead of all Competitors! The richest stock of Goods in Lancaster!

T. FORD, proprietor of the great Tower Hall Clothing Store, desirous of returning his sincerc thanks to the immense number of persons he has secured within the past two years, avails himself of this opportunity to do so, and at the same time extends a hearty invitation to his friends in particular, and the public in general, to call and examine the SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF GOODS; SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF GOODS, he has just received from New York and Philadelphia. The immense amount sold from day to day is the best evidence of their superior quality and cheapness, while the happy looks of his customers as they leave his establishment with their well filled parcels of clothing, speak more plainly than words, their satisfaction. It is a fixed principle of his, to receive no money for which he cannot give a full equivalent, and render the most perfect satisfaction. He takes pleasure in referring to the fact of his having been engaged tor ten years as foreman in the largest and most celebrated Clothing-house in Philadelphia, and is well known through Lancaster! Philadelphia, and is well known through Lancaste rhiadelphia, and is well known through Lancaster county for his superiority as a cutter, and his unapproachable style in getting up splendidly made and fitting Clothing, he trusts that those in want of good garments, cut and made expressly as the purchaser desires it, will give him a call. As to the prices of his goods, he will only state that he is prepared to sell at least THIRTY PER CENT. LOWER
