YOUTH AND AGE.

BY S. T. COLERIDGE, ESQ.

Verse, a breeze 'mid blossoms straying,
Where Hope clung feeling like a bee—
Both were mine! Lyre went a Maying
With NATURE, Hope, and Possy,

With NATURE, HOPE, and POESY,
When I was young! ah, woful wifen!
Ah, for the change 'twixt now and then!
This breathing house not built with hands,
This body, that does me grievous wrong,
O'r airy cliffs and glittering sands
How lightly then it flashed along!
Like those trim skiffs, unknown of yore,
On winding lakes and rivers wide;
That ask no aid of sail or tide!
Nought cared this body for wind or weather,
When Youth and I lived in't together!
Flowers are lovely, Love is flower-like,
Friendship is a sheltering tree,—
Of FRIENDSHIP, Love, and LIBERTY,
Ere I was old;
Ere I was old? ah, mourful ERE,
Which tells me Youth's no longer here;
O Youth! for years so many and sweet,

O Youth! for years so many and sweet,
Tis known that thou and I were one— I'll think it but a fond conceit; It cannot be that thou art gone! Thy vesper-bell hath not yet tolled; And thou wert aye a masker bold— What strange disguise hast now put on, To make believe that thou art gone ? I see these locks in silvery slips, This drooping gait, this altered size; But spring-tide blossoms on thy lips, And tears take sunshine from thine eyes! Life is but Thought! so think I will, That Youth and I are house-mates still!

THE WOLF CHASE.

BY C. WHITEHEAD.

During the winter of 1844, being engaged i the northern part of Maine, I had much leisure to devote to the wild sports of a new country. To of this State, frozen by the intense cold of the of this State, frozen by the intense took of this pastime. Often would I bind on my skates, of this pastime. Often would I bind on my skates, by road leading to the south, where two high banks and, glide away on the glittering river, and wind each mazy streamlet that flowed beneath its fetters on toward the parent ocean, forgetting all the while time and distance in the luxurious sense of the glittering motion-thinking of nothing in the easy flight, but rather dreaming, as I looked thro' the transparent ice at the long weeds and creases that noddled in the current beneath, and seemed wrestling with the waves to let them go; or I would tail until the trail would enter the woods. Someme, I canaot recall without a nervous feeling.

I had left my friend's house one evening just be-

I had left my friend's house one evening just before dusk, with the intention of skating a short distance up the noble Kennebec, which glided directly before the door. The night was beautifully clear. A peerless moon rode through an occasionally fleecy cloud, and stars twinkled from the sky and from every frost covered tree in militians. You wonder at the light that came glitter. You wonder at the light that came glittergleam of the kennebec, that like a jewened zone swept between the mighty forests on its banks.—
And yet all was still. The cold seemed to have trozen tree, and air, and water, and every thing and then, "exclaimed the blacksmith, "and then I'll is the ringing of my skates on that moved. Even the ringing of my skates on the ice echoed back from the Mocasin Hill with a startling clearness, and the crackle of the ice as I with a sudden effort of strength, dragged the blackpassed over it in my course seemed to follow the tide of the river with lightning speed.

I had gone up the river nearly two miles, when, formed an archway radiant with frost work. All was dark within, but I was young and fearless, and as I peered into an unbroken forest that reared itn the borders of the stream. I laughed with very joyousness, my wild hurra rang through the silent woods and I stood listening to the echo that reverberated again and again, until all was hushed. I thought how often the Indian hunter had conrealed himself behind these very trees—how often nis arrow had pierced the deer by this very stream and his wild halloo had here rung for its victory And then turning from fancy to reality. I watched couple of white owls, that sat in their hooded state, with ruffled pantalets and long ear tabs, debating in silent conclave the affairs of their frozen realm, and wondering if they, "for all their feathers were cold." when suddenly a sound arose—it seemed to come from beneath the ice; it sounder low and tremulous at first, until it ended in one wild yell. I was appalled. Never before had such a noise met my ears. I thought it more than mortal—so fierce, and amid such an unbroken sol itude it seemed as if a fiend had blown a blas from an infernal trumpet.

Presently I heard the twigs on shore snap, as if tread of some animal, and the rushed back to my forehead with a bound that made my skin burn, and I felt relieved that I had to contend with things earthly, and not of a spirit-ual nature—my energies returned, and I looked around me for some means of escape. The moon shone through the opening of the mouth of the creek the same way by which I had entered the forest, and considering this the best means of escape, I darted towards it like an arrow. hardly a hundred yards distant, and the swallow could scarcely excel my desperate flight; yet, as I objects dashing through the underbush at a pace nearly double in speed to my own. By this great speed, and the short yells which they occasionally gave. I knew at once that these were the much ded gray wolf.

I had never met with these animals, but from the description given of them I had but little pleasure in making their acquaintance. Their untarre-able fierceness, and the untiring strength which seems part of their nature, render them objects of every benighted traveller "With their long gallop, which can tire, The fierce hound's hate and the hunter's fire." they pursue their prey-never straying from the track of their victim—and as the wearied hunter thinks he has outstripped them, he finds that they but waited for the evening to seize their prey, and falls a prize to the tireless animals.

The bushes that skirted the shore flew past with velocity of lightning as I dashed on, in my flight to pass the narrow opening. The outlet was nearly gained; one second more and I would be in comparative safety, when my pursuers appeared on the bank directly before me, which here rose to the height of ten feet. There was no time ight, so I bent my head and dashed madly for The wolves sprang but miscalculating my speed, sprang behind while their intended prey glided out upon the river.

Nature turned me towards home. The flakes of snow spun from the iron of my skates and I was some distance from my pursuers, when their fierce howl told me L was still their fugitive. I did not look back; I did not feel afraid, or sorry or glad; premium. To show how rapidly silver is disaplook back; I did not feel afraid, or sorry or glad; one thought of home, of the bright faces awaiting my return, of their tears if they should never see me, and then every energy of body and mind was exerted for escape. I was perfectly at home on the ice. Many were the days that I spent on my good skates, never thinking that they would at one time be my only means of safety. Every half minute an alternate yelp from my fierce attendants made me but too certain that they were in close I see my only means of the first of January and the first of January made me but too certain that they were in close I see my only pursuit. Nearer and nearer they came, I heard years and a half the silver was reduced their fast pattering on the ice nearer atill, until I and the gold increased $20,218,161.

could feel their breath and hear their snuffing seent. Every nerve was strained to the utmost tension. The trees along the shore seemed to dance in the uncertain light, and my brain turned with my own terrible speed, yet they still seemed to biss forth their breath with a sound truly horrible when an involuntary motion on my part turned me out of my course. The wolves close behind unable to stop, and as unable to turn on the smooth ice, slipped and fell, still going on far ahead; their tongues lolling out, their white tusks glaring from their bloody mouths; their dark, shaggy breasts fleeced with foam; as they passed me their eyes g'ared, and they howled with fury. The thought dished on my mind that by this means I could avoid them, viz-by turning aside whenever they came too near; for they, by the formation of their feet, are unable to run on ice except in a straight I immediately acted upon this plan. The wolves having regained their feet, sprang directly towards me. The race was renewed for twenty yards up stream; they were already close to my back, when I glided round and dashed directly past my pursuers. A fierce yell greeted my evolutions, and the ers. A herce yell greeted my evolutions, and the wolves, slipped upon their haunches sailing onward, a perfect picture of helplessness and baffled rage. Thus I gained nearly a hundred yards at each turning. This was repeated two or three times, every baffled. At one time, by delaying my turning too long, at one time, by delaying my turning too long, my fierce antagonists came so near that they threw the white foam over my dress as they sprang to seize me, and their teeth clashed together like the spring of a fox trap. Had my skates failed for a single instant, had I tripped on a stick, or caught in a fissure of the ice, the story I am telling would never have been told. I thought all the hances over; I knew where they would first take hold of me if I fell; I thought how long it would be before I died, and when there would be a search for the body that would already have its tomb; for oh! how fast man's mind traces out all the dread colors of death's picture, only those who have been near the grim monster can tell.

I at last escaped, and reached my friend's house, firmly resolved never to make another night ex-

An Incident of Brandywine.

The hero of the following story was an humble blacksmith, but his stout frame, hardened by toil, throbbed with as generous an impulse for freedom as ever beat in the bosom of a Lafavette, or throbbed around the heart of mad Anthony Wayne.

It was in the full tide of the retreat, that a folower of the American camp, who had at least shouldered a cart whip in his country's service, was devote to the wild sports of a new country. To dragging a baggage wagon from the battle field, none of them was I more passionately addicted than to skating. The deep and sequestered lakes that to skating the deep and sequestered lakes are the state of the state of of rocks and crags, arising on either side, afforded space just sufficient for the passage of his wagon, and not an inch more. His eyes were arrested by the sight of a stout, muscular man, some forty years of age, extended at the foot of a tree at the very opening of this pass. He was clad in the coarse attire of a mechanic. His coat had been follow on the track of some otter, and run my with his rifle in his grasp, while the blood streamed skate along the mark he had left with his dragging in a torrent from his right leg, broken at the knee tail until the trail would enter the woods. Some-times these excursions were made by moonlight, and it was on one of those occasions that I had a rencontre which, even now, with kind faces around me, I canaot recall without a nervous feeling.

mechanic refused.

"I'll not get into your wagon," he exclaimed, in. until they came trampling over this valley, and ing from the ice, and snow wreathed and incrusted burned my house down—and now I am all riddled anches, as the eyes followed for miles the broad to pieces, and hain't got no more than fifteen mineam of the Kennebec, that like a jewelled zone utes life in me; but I've got three balls in my carts.

The wagoner started his horses ahead, smith along the sod to the foot of the tree surmoun

I had gone up the river hearty two lines, washed and in a moment his back was proposed against the coming to a little stream which empties into the tree, his face towards the advancing troopers, his barger, I turned in to explore its course. Fir and shartered leg hanging over the bank. The wagoner rushed on his way, while the blacksmith very coolly proceeded to load his rifle.

It was not long before a body of American soldiers rushed by with the British in pursuit. The blacksmith greeted them with a shout, and then raising his rifle to his shoulder, he picked the foremost from his steed, with the exclamation: "That's for Gen. Washington!" In a moment the rifle was -again it was fired, and the pursuing British rode over the body of another tallen officer for myself," cried the blacksmith. And then with hand strong with the feeling of coming death, the sturdy freeman again loaded, again rais He fired his last shot, and as another soldier kissed. the sod, a tear quivered in the eye of the dying blacksmith. "And that," he cried, with a husky blacksmith voice, which strengthened into a shout, "and that's for mad Anthony Wayne!"

Long after the battle was past, the body was discovered, propped against the tree, with the features frozen in death, smiling grimly, while the right hand grasped the never-failing rifle.

And thus died one of the thousand of brave me chanic heroes of the revolution; brave in the hour of battle, undaunted in the hour of retreat, and un dismayed in the hour of death.

MELANCHOLY DEATH.-A case of remorse onscience has been related to us. The wife of had been lingering in an illness for several month previous to her death, which occurred about three She was often dependent on her neighweeks ago. She was often dependent on her n bors for what attentions she received. Her hus often left her alone for days at a time, and when the Convention adjourned till 71 o'clock in the he would return it was not to make her sick bed cheerful by those attentions which a kind hear would render and a confiding companion would expect. Whilst away, his wife died. He was sent for immediately; but, being slow to body dug up from the grave. He gazed upon the features of the dead a moment, and then ordered the remains to be restored to the earth. He returned to his labor, but the memory of his ill treatment to her haunted him in his moments of labor and rest. His mind became a wreck. He grew crazy and gnawed the very flesh from his body. Even in his insanity he was a prey to renorse. His system soon yielded to the influence of sympathy, and in two weeks from the time when he had last looked upon the coffin of his wife, he had taken his place by her side in the grave. Mr. —— was a man of some property, was industrious, saving, honest, and altogether a better citizen than a husband. He has no haps, learned to "bear and forbear," and had failed to train his heart to endure the domestic trials which distinguish the life of the mere citizen from that of the head of a family -Clinton (Pa.) Dem.

SCARCITY OF SILVER .- Our readers have remarked the great complaints made in the foreign journals, recently, of the great and growing scarcity of silver coin. Much inconvenience, we understand, is becoin. Much inconvenience, we understand, is be-ginning likewise to be experienced on this side of the water, owing to the same scarcity of this kind of currency. The Bank, the Post Office and the Custom-House, it is said, have to purchase all the small change they use for ordinary business pu tain that they were in close 1850, $77,411,980. Thus showing that in three nearer they came, I heard years and a half the silver was reduced $11,755,54 ed $11.755,542.
