CHILDHOOD.

How beautiful is childhood-How innocent its glee! How clear its merry laugh, that speaks

Tis like a pleasant morning, When the air is fill'd with song : Or like a summer stream that glides So merrily along.

The heart from sorrow free!

How beautiful is childhood-How trustful-how content! Its memory has no blotted page-No follies to lament!

'Tis like a simple flower that grows All blooming, fair and bright, Or like a cheering star that glows Upon the robe of night.

The True Lady.

By the Editor of the Portland Eclectic. We once knew a "young lady," who lived in fine style. Her parlors were elegantly furnished, and her dress was always of the latest fashion. She had her piano and her teacher, and she played Italian music charmingly. In all the exquisite graces of life she was faultless. She had a rich vein of sentiment, too, and could talk philosophy, or dis-cuss the standard authors, at pleasure. Of course she read novels; in fact, a large portion of the day was devoted to that interesting and instructive class of polite literature. She was also somewhat indus trious, for she would occasionally work embroidery. With an abundance of curls, that floated over her neck in beautiful profusion, a fine form, hands white and delicate, large powers of conversation in the usual drawing-room style, she was followed by the young men of taste. Yet, somehow, she never got married. The "beaux" fluttered around her like flies over a pot of honey, but they were very careful not to be caught as those other insects are apt to do. Their attentions were never so particular as to require some "friend of the family" to demand what were their intentions. This was no fault of the young lady. She was in the market as plainly as though she had inscribed it on her forehead, "A HUSBAND WANTED: for particulars enquire within:"
But the husband never, to our knowledge, came; and

But the husband never, to our knowledge, came; and we believe she is at this day a disconsolate old maid. What was the trouble? Step with us into the kitchen. That fat woman, with a red face, is the servant of the house. She does the cooking the washing and the chamber-work. From early dawn until late at night, she is a slave. Well, that wom an is onr charming young lady's mother! She never sees her daughter's "callers." If by accident she should drop into the parlor while visitors were present, she would hasten out again with embarassed manner, looking as though she had committed an offence, while her own child's face would be suffused with blushes.

Now take a walk with us. In that work-shop do you see that hard-working mechanic? The wrinkles are hardening upon his face, and the grey hairs are thinly sprinkled over his head. He looks wrinkles are hardening upon his face, and the grey hairs are thinly sprinkled over his head. He looks anxious, and as though his heart-strings tugged some deep sorrow and rortification. He is the father of our beautiful "young lady," and his hard earnings, for many years, have been absorbed in the expensive luxuries that her admirable total him deed, Mr. S.—. there must be something weren the expensive luxuries that her admirable total him deed, Mr. S.—. there must be something weren the something were the s expensive luxuries that her admirable taste has craved. He, too, is excluded from the society of his own daughter. She moves in a circle above her parents, and, in short, is ashamed of them. They live in the kitchen—she in the parlor. They drudge—she reaps the fruit. She has no pulsation of gratitude for all this. She despises them, and, in fashionable gatherings, is the first to curl her pretty lips at "low mechanics," provided she can do so

Is she a true lady? No; ten thousand times No! We object not to her accomplishments—to her taste in dress—to her manners. We look upon and ad-mire such just as we do a superb statue of Venus. As a work of art it is beautiful; but, nevertheless, it is insensate marble, having no soul, being of n use in practical life, and good for nothing but to

The beauty of the mind is the true beauty; and ingly into the heart of hearts of her parents-who makes her mother her companion and confidante—who not only works for that mother, but takes the heaviest burden upon herself-she is the true lady She may never have struck a note on the piano ise is melodious with harmony, such as angels sing. Her exterior may be humble, but her interior life is clothed in the vestments of immor-

There are many "young ladies" whose whole character is on the surface. Dress, manners, ac-complishments, all are external. They have no character is on the depth of thought, no moral strength, no heart.

They are "outsiders." When the scorching fires of adversity burn beneath the surface, there is no pro tecting wall upreared within. The whole but a heap of ashes, though it may retain the out ward semblance of humanity.

The true lady cultivates the higher nature. She is religious, but not fanatical-courteous, but not fawning. Reposing serenely upon the arm of her heavenly Father, and associating with unseen angelic spirits, she meets the storm with calmness and accepts it as a disciplinary mercy. Her sympathy ever pulsates to the cry of suffering, and her hand is ever open to relieve. She is beautiful at home, beautiful at the bedside of the sick, beautiful through life, beautiful at the hour of her departure into the world of spirits, and transcendantly and eternally beautiful in heaven. That is the true lady.

The Confession of a Subscriber to the Steubenville Herald.

One of our subsribers came into the office a few veeks ago, and asked what was the amount of hi anded us the full amount, and said: "I have been taking the Herald six or seven years, have always been pleased with it, and would like to continue my name on your list as long as it is published, out times are hard, and money scarce: I find that can hardly get along at all, so I must retrench y stopping your paper." "Well," said we, "the sum is small—a mere trifle amily do for a newspaper, to inform them of the family oppose my stopping it strongly. It reaches us every Thursday, and in the evening our eldest daughter sits down (while my wife is employed in knitting or sewing, and I am toasting my feet by a cheerful fire, after a day of hard toil,) and reads aloud one half of its contents, and on the next aloud one nail of its contents, and on the next evening our eldest boy finishes—so, of course, we enjoy it very much. When I told my wife my intention of discontinuing the Herald, she said that she would sit up till after midnight to knit stock ings to pay for it. But, poor woman, she works hard enough now! So I must stop it!"

"You know" said we, with a little warmth,

"that you are able to pay, but there's no compul-sion about it—so, here it goes," and off went his

The circumstances would have forever been for-The circumstances would have forever been for-gotten, had it not been for the re appearance of our quondam subscriber a few days since. He came into our office, and sauntered around for awhile and seemed to be in quite a gloomy mood. Finally we said to him, in rather a light and inquisi-tive way, "Well Mr. S-, how do you get along ive way, "Well Mr. S—, how do you get along without your newspaper, now?" "Bad enough," was the response "When the first Thursday came around, after I had stopped though I well knew he would'nt get it. He re turned with the complaint that all the other subscribers' papers had come but ours. 'What can i mean, Mr. S.?' asked my worthy spouse. 'O,' said I. I expect the printer boys neglected to put it in the packet yesterday.' Well, but they never miss-ed before,' said she, 'and there must be something wrong, and she fixed a searching look upon me but I said nothing. That evening passed gloomy enough. The next day the children became un enough. The next day the children became unusually noisy, and got into petty quarrels, and every now and then my wife would say "there must be something wrong." 'Yes,' I would sometimes say, 'there must,' and then look in another direction from her. 'Well the next Thursday came on, and the boy was again sent to the office on his useless errand, and returned with the same complaint as before. My wife's first exclamation plaint as before. My whe's first exciamation, as she anxiously awaited his return, and, heard his report, was—Indeed, Mr S.—, there must be something wrong! Now, thinks I, I shall have to out with it; but I remembered just at that particular moment, that I had forgotten to feed the hogs, and they must be fed; but when I reached the and they must be fed; but when I reached the hog pen, I recollected of having fed them but a short time before. When I returned to the house all was in an uproar—the children quarreling and fighting, and the baby squalling terribly, and my good natured spouse in by no means a pleasant mood. Her attempts to pacify were vain. If she should succeed, it would be but for a moment, the rising household would rebel, and every rebellion grew worse. Thus passed that evening, and Friday evening promised to be still worse. Things began to look 'blue' long before sunset. I feared the arrival of the night, but it came, and as I expected, the children were still noisier and more re deed, Mr. S-, there must be something wrong! I borrowed a copy of the Herald, and returned home. I had scarcely opened the door, when two or three voices cried out, the paper's come! the paper's come!' Our little girl eagerly snatched it, and sat down to her old task, and soon all was quiet; even the baby though wide awake, seemed in a happy, good humor. Now, all this fuss and occasioned by my stopping the Herald, trouble wa and before I will pass two more such weeks, I will pay for a dozen newspapers. Here $\frac{8}{2}$ for another year. A newspaper is a great 'peace' maker' in a family. Mind, I have not told my wife that I had stopped the paper, and wish her never to know it I should not have made this free confession, had l not thought that it might save some poor d—l from falling into my error, his household thrown into confusion, and his ears continually greeted with—near Germantown, Pa., thence southwesterly to the Blue Ridge of the Alleghany mountain, along the east side of the Ridge to Loudon and Faquier counties, Va.; thence easterly through a portion of Fair fax, across the Potomac, above Georgetown, thro Montgomery and upper portion of Anne Arundel counties, Md., to the Patapsco; along the northeast side of the Patapsco to the Chesapeake bay; thence to Havre-de-Grace, through Cecil county, and Delaware, to the Delaware river; up the west side of that river to the beginning. These boundaries are they may now vary. The Locust will certainly appear on the south side of the Patapsco, at least in small numbers, as, during the breeding season in 1834, great numbers were blown over the river by a high wind that prevailed in the height of that season. In Faquier county, Va., also; this district laps over another district for several miles, and tho' laps over another district for several miles, and ino the. Locusts will appear this year on the strip of territory thus doubly occupied, yet they appeared on the same place in 1843, and will appear there again in 1860, thus appearing alternate in 8 and 9 years. Over the whole of the large tract of countries the above boundaries the Liquist try embraced in the above boundaries, the Locusts will appear in myriads. They will begin to leave ier or later, according to the weather. From the first to the 10th of April, their chambers may be uncovered by simply shaving off an inch or two of the surface soil with a spade, in any place where trees or shrubbery stood in 1834. They will resemble small augur holes, 2 to 4 inches apart; and the grub or larvæ may now be found by digging a foot or two deep in the same situations. Those who have valuable shrubbery, will do well to pro tect it by covering it with cheap gaze, from the 1st to the 20th of June. They do no other harm than than that of causing the death of the small twigs, by their perforations for depositing their eggs.

THE WAY WIVES ARE CALIFORNIAIZED .- Just see how wicked men induce their wives to let them go to the gold diggings, by working upon their inocent love of display: There is a wicked man I know. He coaxed his wife to let him go,

But this is the way he did it though
To get to California:

Says he—I'll send you lumps of gold,
Much more than your two hands can hold;
In your own carriage you'll be rolled.

Says she—Now James, you know, my dear,
I cannot live without you here,
But one's own carriage sounds as causer!

But one's own carriage sounds so queer!—
You may go to California. 30 The following is an inscription on a tombtone in Massachusetts:

I came in the morning—it was Spring,
And I smiled— I walked out at noon—It was summer, And I was glad— I sat me down at even—It was Autumn, And I was sad I laid me down at night—It was winter, And I slept.
