MR. EDITOR :- I observe that the columns of the Lancasterian are still alive with articles denunciatory of Mr. Buchanan. The decisive verdicts of the two Democratic State Conventions, recently held, have not cooled its ardour or extracted any portion of the venom from its fangs. Week afte week, whole columns of that paper, are filled with articles, abusing that great and good man, until the public mind has become literally disgusted with the frequency of their repetition. While the people every where, from Maine to Georgia and from St John's River to the golden gates of California, are hailing Wr. Buchanan as their choice for the nex Presidency, this obscure and scarcely known Lan-easterian, is at least determined, that their wishes shall not be accomplished, unless they first "pass over its dead body."

It is remarkable how important some men are in their own judgment. What a multitude of minnow, there are in this world, who consider themselves shad, and shad that think themselves whales, am told there is quite a school of the first mentioned 'small fry" that control the columns of the Lan

When the Lancasterian first made known its when the Lancasterian hist made known its hostility to $1\text{r}. Buchanan, the people in our district were taken somewhat by surprise. They could not get at the reason for that hostility. They saw the name of \(\text{N} \). D. Holbrook at the head of saw the name of M. D. Holbrook at the head of the haper, and knew that the same Holbrook had something to do, but a few years before, with the Intelligencer, and that the Intelligencer was then a-it is now, the warm and devoted friend of Mr. Buchanan. They know too, that while Holbrook was connected with that paper, the public and private character of Mr. Buchanan, were culogized through its columns and all the credit due his dis-tinguished services were fully accorded to him. Why he should change his colors, so suddenly. tinguished services were fully accorded to him. Why he should change his colors, so suddenly, after he had slipped out of the office of the Intelligencer into that of the Lancasterian, was a problem somewhat difficult to solve.

Again, we had not been made acquainted with any change that had taken place, either in the public or private character of Mr. Buchanan. He was still the same pure natiotic and consistent.

public or private character of Mr. Buchanan. He was still the same pure, patriotic and consistent Democrat he had been in years past. His devotion to his country was still as strong as it had been, when he encircled the administration of Andrew Jackson with his great right arm, and shielded it from the assaults of a corrupt Banking influence. He was still the same man he had been when He was still the same man he had been when battling in the Senate, among the giant intellects of the nation, the ablest representative Pennsylvania ever had in that body. And at the time this hostility commenced, he was in the enjoyment of the first position in the Cabinet of the lament of James K. Polk, which he filled with honor to himself and the nation, during an administration un-supassed in brilliancy at any time in the history of the country. All this was known to the "Editors" of the Lancasterian, and the Lancasterian was prof. ssedly a Democratic paper, and we could not conceive what motive could lead to an opposition so singular and unexplained.

But the sins of the Lancasterian have found it

But the sine of the Lancasterian have found it out, and a scriptural declaration in this particular, has been verified. While it wore the lion's hide and remained silent, it passed in the democratic ranks without suspicion, but now that it has begun to bray, the dullest eye can notice the swaggering gait and the lengthened appendages, which bespeak the animal of meaner origin.

The tickets for State officers by both parties have been formed and are now before the neonle. An been formed and are now before the people. An important election is approaching—more important than any ever held in this Commonwealth. And yat on this subject the Lancasterian is silent.

Nothing is said in favor of the Democratic candidates
Not a word of encouragement to its subscribers, to buckle on their armour and go forth to battle against the whigs. The action of the two Democratic Convent ons, have scarcely received a passing no-tice, while the ticket, placed for form sake, at the head of its columns, is an upported by commen or reference. Like a uscless and worn out vessel. or reference. Like a useless and worn out vessel-rotting upon the beach, the Lancasterian reposes; on the outskirts of the Democratic party, without even a sentinel to give the usual watchword. The coward crew, which should have manned its forces, have crept under the hatchway, and not only refuse to do battle for the party, but send out an occasional shot for the enemy. The Lancasterian, my word for it, is playing second fiddle to the Whigs. That is the online of generance who reads it in the opinion of every one who reads it in this is to control of every one who reads it in this six in the truth can no longer be concealed, notwithstanding the vaunted democracy of the legion that write tor its columns.

Now it is an old saying and a true one, that "it is not in the legion that it is an old saying and a true one, that "it is an old saying and a true one, the old saying and a true one of the old saying and a true one, the old saying and a true one of the old saying and a true one of the old saying and a true one, the old saying and a true one of the old saying and a true of the old saying and a true one of the old saying and a true one of the old saying and a true of the old saying and a true of the old saying and a true on

Now it is an old saying and a true one, that is hard to make a site purse out of a sow's ear?"

This saying applies with tremendous force to the present position of the Lancasterian. The man who fromts the corps editorial of that paper, was a few years ago, one of the most bitter and uncompremising antimesons in the Commonwealth. As ising antimasons in the Commonwealth. As notorious a political demagogue as ever hatched a treason, and lacked the courage to put it in force. The people of this county have not, forgotten his intimate connection with the "Buckshot war," and his disgraceful exit from the back window of the State capitol. These are matters that belong to history, and they have stamped this pretender with an intamy that will cling to him like the shirt of Nessus while life lasts. Yet this man abuses of Nessus while life lasts. Yet this man abuses James Buchanan, under the pretext of doing the Democratic party service. And he is aided and encouraged in his dirty work by certain other men,

This Lancasterian, thus composed, holds itself out to the world as a Democratic organ. Its heroes thus caparisoned, have started out, with helmets on and spears at rest, to effect the annihilation of James Buchanan. And the adventures of the renowned Don Quixote are not replete with more signal failures or mistaken notions of chivalry, than have been the adventures of this motley crew.—
Like that eccentric and deluded knight, they have been unhorsed in every tournament, whether their attack has been upon the shephard or his flock, the sheeted tent or the lion in his lair, the result has been the same. Twice have they but recently been vanquished, and though still sore and bleeding from their wounds, I observe by the movement of their life guard (the Committee) they are preparing for another and final adventure. With the Saucho Pancho of the party I cannot help but sympathize. Personally I have always been his friend; politically I never will, while he retai is his present position. signal failures or mistaken notions of chivalry, than never will, while he retai s his present position pity him from the depth of my soul. The man as some noble qualities, which might be turned to errantry and resume his former useful and respec-errantry and resume his former useful and respectable place among his friends.

That the efforts of the Lancasterian to injure Mr. Buchanan and through him, the Democratic party, will all end in its own discomfiture, I entertain no doubt. The popularity of that great man, has been growing larger and larger, until it has filled the whole country, and the people every where look up to him as the hope of the nation in the next Presidential term. He will be the candidate of the Democracy in 1852, just as certain as the sun shines, the predictions of the Lancasferian to the contrary notwithstanding; and as such will receive a larger majority than has been posted up, since we rallied under the standard of the Hermitage, led on by the watchword of "Jackon and no tage, led on by the watchword of "Jackson and no bank." Let the Lancasterian and its Buckshot leader, still play into the hands of the Whigs. We can spare ten thousand of corteges when the day of trial comes. Every effort they make to injure Mr. Buchanan brings him additional scores of friends. In denouncing him, they denounce the Democracy of the country and of the nation, for the decree has been passed, that he is their man. The torrent of public opinion is in his favor, and the Lancasterian might as well-acceptance. Lancasterian might as well attempt to stay the lightning in the cloud or still the sound of the thunder clap as to arrest its progress.

The nation looks up to James Buchanau in this hour of its extremity. To him will be confided the noble trust of righting the ship of State, and piloting her safely from among the shoals and sands into which she has been driven. And while engaged in this proud duty, he will crown his val-uable services to his country by another act which will fill one more page of our imperishable history, and himself enjoy that rich confidence, which will cnable him to entwine in the wreath that now encircles his brow an evergreen that will refler it Снинситоwn, July 22, 1851.
