From the Stanuton Spectator Old Oaks an l Willows, Fare ye Well. BY JOHN T. HUMPHREYS.

Old oaks and willows of my childhood's home,

The secrets of my life 1'll tell

To you, and breathe the cause which bade me roam,

And sing to you a last farewell.

In early childhood 'neath your boughs I stray'd,
Although a child, not all alone,
For near the traces which my footsteps made,
A sister stood—now she is gone.

Her rosy tresses waved like molten jet,
And clustring kissed her dimpled cheek,
She told she loved me, when our glances met,
"In language eyes can only speak. And when in riper years, 'though still in youth,
I'chose (too young) the Poet's lot,
And blent with scenes of fiction, word of truth,
My friends forsook me, she did not.

But other hearts beside a sister's shared

(Now mourn for honor ceas'd to live;)
They pain'd, but could not crush the trusting hearth to theirs to mourn—mine to forgive. Awhile forgiving, one thing alone I say, Reluctant pardon feels regret; Their luture days may obb like Naples bay,

THE PAST, I never can forget. Now all are gone, and ev'ry object there, That once seem'd glad as spring to me,
Is cheerless as the Icebergs in the air,
Which loom above the Polar Sea.

Old oaks and willows of my childhood's home, I've told ye whence the sombre spell,
That clouded life and bade me still to roam, Old oaks and willows, fare ye well. STAUNTON, May 28, 1851.

THE NOBLE PRUSSIAN GIRL.

A THRILLING TALE OF SILESIA.

During the seven years' war, the exertions of the Prussians in that critical moment to support the allen fortunes of their indefatigable monarch, were fallen fortunes of their incelatigable monarch, were truly worthy of a luminous character in the records of history—but they were far outdone by the public sacrifices which were voluntarily made by individuals to repel the encroachments of the armies of France in the year 1806. Each family contrib-uted in different ways to the expenses of the war -even the poorest hordes gave in their mite for the general good, though it deprived their families of many a little luxury which they had before been In one of the romantic vallies of Silesia lived a young girl of surpassing beauty—the pride and delight of her parents—whose only occupation was to attend to flocks and bear the scant produce of their little farm to a neighboring town. Ella, like the wild flowers, had grown and bloomed in obscurity, adorned and beautified by the unerring hand of nature. She had seen but little of the world, until the trump of war sounded over the country, and echoed discordantly amidst the recesses of its solitude-and when, in consequence of her njuries, her futher was obliged to tell her of the distracted state of her native land, the indignant blush and high heaving of her bosom proclaimed how much she felt for her enterprising sovereign and the brave people who were arrayed to defend his dominions.

Heaven grant us the victory," exclaimed she in the patriotic enthusiasm of her soul. " I would, father, that nature had made me strong enough to the soldiers.

The caution was scarcely needed, Ella knew where to find one whom she might gaze upon for nours-and who though not dressed out in the trappings of the military, was more to her than all the world besides. She was soon at the mountain's slope watching her herds, and listening to the mel low notes as they flowed from the pipe of Adolphe -a fine featured young man who sat at her feet, gazing tenderly upon her smiling face.

"That hair of yours, Ella," said he, laying down the instrument, "I would give the world for one ittle lock," and he ran his fingers through the clossy tresses, as they hung luxuriously around her moulded shoulders.

No, Adolphe, first prove yoursell worthy of the gift, and then you shall have not only a tress, but my hand, too, if you desire it." "Tell me how to become worthy of so estimate ble a gift," exclaimed the enraptured youth, "and I will follow the path you point out."

"There it is," answered the maiden, pointing towards Breslau, and looking her lover fixedly "And what am I to do in Breslau?"

cesses of the valley.

There was more courtliness in the speech of the unitu-Adolphe than generally falls to the lot of the untutored mountaineers of Silesia; and Ella thought, as he wended his way down the narrow defile, that there was more dignity in his mien than she had ever before observed-she scarcely dare ask herself who he was; for he had been among the sheperds, and no one knew aught of hi birth or profession; but every one loved him for his generosity and nobleness of spirit.

'My hair," said Ella, as the youth vanished from her sight, "I will dress it for his sake. They say it is rich and beautiful. Ah! how freely would destroy each ample tress, and scatter it upon the did he not love to smooth it with his fin-

Months rolled away, and Ella watched her herds and the demon of war continued to spread his des-

It was proposed to raise a sum by contribution among the inhabitants of the mountain, which should be placed in the general fund and appropriated to the use of the defenders of the King. " No, my daughter," answered the old man, "our country requires no sacrifice; we must not derive ourselves of the means of a livelihood." Ella reflected for a long while and formed a thousand plans for raising a sum of money that was worthy of being given in aid of the patriotic cause, but all her schemes were impracticable, had she even wept in solitude for her inability to serve her

"Would that these locks were wires of gold," exclaimed she, running her fingers through the clustering tresses as they dallied in the wind-"that might give them for the general good. Can they not be sold? I will go to Breslau and offer them ey may bring but a trifle, yet they are all I hav tow. But Adolphe-when he returns and beholds me deprived of my greatest beauty-what will he say? Alas! she will turn from me—he will love me no more. Well, be it so, I will sucrifice even his love to the cause of Liberty !"

She accordingly proceeded to Breslau, and offered her hair for sale to the first friscur in the city.— The loveliness of the young girl, and the novelty of her offer, caused the person to enquire why she robbed herself of such beautiful tresses. On reeiving her answer he was astonished at the extrardinary disinterested patriotism displayed by one young and interesting. "I will take the locks, my pretty girl," said he admiring the softness of their texture, "and turn them into bracelests. Every-body will buy them when they know whose hair they are made of."

The delighted girl received the proffered sum and flew to add it to the general fund. The friscur had predicted right; the story got wind, and ladies and gentlemen of the city flocked to the store to purchase the bracelets marked ELLA. Among others a young man of high rank hearing the story of chase the bracelets marked ELLA. Among others a young man of high rank, hearing the story, endeavored to obtain one of the articles. The vender had but one left, and as he had already realized a considerable sum from their sale, he intended to keep that for himself. The officer examined the olor and the texture of the hair, when his eyes color and the texture of the nair, when in system fell upon the name of Ella, a smile of pride and gratitude curled his lip, and he uttered, "It must be she!" He emptied his purse upon the counter, and told the man to take it all for the bracelet, and the blad but the principle of so many the braced. dazzled by the sight of so much gold, he readily consented. The officer left the shop with the treasure pressed to his lips.

come to claim my reward."

"Adolphe," answered she, "I became jealous of my hair; your heart became entangled among its" curls; the more I combed them, the more they webbed around your heart, and so I cut them off.
Do you love me without my locks, Adolphe?"
"Love you, Ella? Could I do less than worship you, since you have so nobly married your beauty for the benefit of your country? Look at this brace-

Thus caught, the generous girl thought it useless to deny the facts here recorded. She confessed all, and shortly after became the wife of the stranger Adolphe, Count of Ruthland.

The Perils of Suspicion. THE VICTIMS. And shall we all condem, and all distrust,

"And shall we dat condens and an answer,
Because some men are false, and some unjust!
Forbid it, Heaven! far better 'twere to be Duped of the fond impossibility
Of light and radiance, which sleep's visions grave,
Than thus to live, Suspicion's better slave!"

We cannot well conceive a more cruel case, than that of an individual who is made to suffer in char acter, in feelings or in fortune, through an unfounded suspicion, -a suspicion too, that has some apparent ground, from the force of circumstances. And yet, how prone are most of persons to include thoughtlessly and recklessly, if not wantonly, in this species of accusation and injustice. There is scarcely an individual of mature years, who has mingled with the world with any degree of activity, who cannot remember circumstances in which he himself was unjustly and improperly suspected of some unkind or ungenerous act, and thus made to suffer,—or who is not able to recall some period of life, when he for months, nay, perhaps for years, dealt with like injustice toward others. It is so easy for poor human nature to be deceived or mistaken. Our prejudices are so strong, our infirmities are so great, that we are apt to believe according to our wishes, rather than the facts, and thus to examine and decide, not in conformity with truth, equity and justice, but of falsehood, bigotry, and prejudice. It sometimes happens, too, that even when individuals know that they are erroneously suspected of some discourtesy or ill-will, circumstances exist which render an explanation painful or improper; and hence they are compelled to suffer on, even at the of health itself. The sensitive, the timid and the expense of peace of mind, loss of character, nay, conscientious, are especially adapted to become victims under such circumstances. Alas! how much wrong, injustice, and outrage have been perpetrated through the influence of unfounded suspicional Hamman and the contract have been perpetrated. cious! How many hearts have been broken? How often has jealousy thus been kindled into madness, and love converted into hate?

distrust in the minds of the morbid, the watchful and suspecting, and give a false, yet vivid coloring to innocent acts! Let suspicion or distrust once exist in a family circle, between husband and wife, the lover and his affianced, and what a world of anxiety and anguish may be produced. There are, moreover, demons in human shape, who take de light in fomenting such feelings, who watch fo opportunities when they may whisper words of doubt, and thus excite in the susceptible or the sensitive thoughts and emotions of the most painful character. We not long since heard of an instance, where an anonymous letter, carefully and plausibly written, was addressed to a distinguished citizen of a neighboring State, the object being to create distrust and discord between man and wife. Just enough facts were mentioned, to give an air of probability to the story, and for a time, the effect was truly unpleasant. For unately, the slandered was fully able to exonerate himself, and to prove that the malignant and dastardly author was prompted, either by mistaken folly or wanton maprompted, either by mistaken by Wathou halice, and thus the evil was but temporary. Conduct like this deserves the keenest censure. He who wantonly sports with feelings or affections, who delights in sowing the seeds of distrust and suspicion, who takes pleasure in hunting out the firmities and short comings of his friends and neighbors, is very apt, not only to forget his own errors and misdoings, but in the absence of facts, o resort to fiction, and thus in the gratification of a perverted taste to manufacture slander and libels the worst description. The habit is a perni ous one, and it is likely to increase with and with practice. There are certain suspiciou people who are perpetually on the watch for some mishap, error or false step, on the part of those with whom they associate, or indeed, anywhere in the out-door or in-door world—and, the moment they get an inkling of any untoward circumstan es, they vividly imagine a train of incidents cal culated to make out a dark story, and not satisfied with fancying it, they speedily give it currency.

Philadelphia Inquirer.

On Sunday afternoon, during the severest of the ower, as we leisurely strolled along Court street neditating upon the advantages of frequent July howers to young ducks and hay-makers, our eye suddenly fell upon a form of magnificent propor-tions just in front of us, standing beneath a canvass wning for protection from the rain. We invol untdrily stopped. Before us stood a young and doubtless lovely female. Her muslin frock was of nowy whiteness, over which was thrown, with an f genteel elegance, a black silk visite. ter head she wore her bridal hat encircled by wreath of orange blossoms. In her white gloved hand she held a parasol of the newest style—and upon a foot of Cinderella pattern, gracefully fitted a white satin slipper. What, thought we, will be the loss of one of Aborn's best or this six dollar ummbrella in comparison with one smile of gratitude from so fair a creature. Then, too, we may hear her silvery voice, musical as the lute, muttering in accents low but tender, a kind "thank you." Our deter nination was fixed. We had resolved, and if it ha uined Park street and State House cupolas tumbled er, our purpose could not have been changed our proudest step we advanced. Serenading a Young Lady.

In my young days, I was extravagantly fond of ttending parties, and was somewhat celebrated for playing the flute; hence it was generally expected, when an invitation was extended, that my flute would accompany me. It visited a splendid party one evening, and was called upon to favor the cor pany with a tune on the flute. I, of course, immediately complied with the request. The company appeared to be delighted, but more particularly so, was a young lady, who raised her hands and exclaimed that it was beautiful, delightful, &c. I, of course, was highly flattered, and immediately formed a resolution to serenade the young lady on the following night. Previous to leaving the party, I made inquiry respecting her residence. I started the next night, in company with young friends and arrived, as I supposed at the lady's residence, but made a most glorious mistake, by getting under the window of an old Qualter.—
"Now boys," said I, "behold the sentimentality o this young lady the moment I strike up the Las Rose of Summer." I struck up, but the window remained closed. The boys smiled, 'Oh,' said I, that is nothing; it would not be in good taste

"Once more, boys," said I; "and she must come."
I struck up again—My Love is like the Red, Red Rose, Still there was no demonstration. "Boys," said I; "she's a humbug. Let us sing Home, Sweet Home, and if that don't bring her, we will give her up." We struck up, and as we finished the last line the window was raised. "That's the ticket line, the window was raised. "That's the ticket, boys," said I; "I knew we could fetch her." But instead of the beautiful young lady, it turned out to be the old Quaker in his night-cap and dressing-"Friend," said he, "thee was singing of the nome-I think thee said thy sweet home-and if recollect right, thee said there was no place like home; now, if there is no place like home, why lon't thee go to thy home? ### Black-Eyed Susan.

Gay wrote this well known ballad upon Mrs. loutford, a celebrated actress contemporary with Cibber. After her retirement from the stage, love and the ingratitude of a bosom friend, deprived her of her senses, and she was placed in a receptacle for lunatics. One day, during a lucid interval, she for limities. One day, unling a line asked her attendant what play was to be performed that evening, and was told that it was Hamlet. In this frogedy, whilst on the stage, she had ever been received with rapture, in Ophelia.

She was in truth, Ophelia herself, to the amazement of the performers and the audience.— Nature having made this last effort, her vital powers failed her. On going off the stage, she exclaimed

She was immediately conveyed to her late place off security, and a lew days after,

Courtship of a Bashful Clergy-

The Rev. John Brown, of Hadington, the wellknown author of the Self-Interpreting Bible, was a man of singular bashfulness. In token of the truth of this statement, it need only be stated that his courtship lasted seven years. Six years and a half had passed away, the reverend gentleman had got no further forward than he had the first six days.— This state of affairs became intolerable: A step in advance was to be made, and Mr. Brown summon-

"Janet," said he, as they sat in solemn silence, "we've been acquainted for six years an' mair, and I've never gotten a kiss yet. Dye think I might take one, my bopnis eigl?" take one, my bonni "Just as you like John; only be becoming and proper wi' it."

Surely, Janet, we'll ask a blessing." The blessing was asked, the kiss was taken, and he worthy divine, perfectly overpowerd with the lissful sensation, most rapturously exclaimed, "Oh, woman! but it is gude. We'll return thanks. Six months made the pious couple man and wife; and, added his descendant, who humerously told the a happier couple never spent a long and use

Be Careful of Cucumbers.

On Sunday evening last, we learn that a you ady and gentleman attended divine service at one our churches in this city, after which they returnd to the residence of the lady in Brandywine Vil lage, and as is customary on such occasions with young people, talked over love matters until a late hour, when all of a sudden the lady complained of the cholic, caused as she said by taking cucumbers at tea, and hastened the young man with all the speed of a locomotive for a physician. The young man ran and knocked up the physician, and related o him the importance of his being present as soon s possible. The physician on approaching the ouse heard the screams of the female and immediately inquired into the symptoms of the case, when lo, and behold! instead of the cholic, it turned out be a little infant, whose birth had ailed her in stead of the cucumbers, as she supposed. Ladies should be careful how they eat cucumbers of a Sunday afternoon, if such is the result .- Wilming on paper.

Col. John W. Forney.

We have noticed long since, a most unanim-We have noticed long since, a most unanimous sentiment pervading the Democratic press of this and other States, in favor of John W. Foruey, as a candidate for Clerk of the next Congressional House of Representatives. It is a just and noble tribute to a gentleman who has given signal evidence of devotion to his party, and at the same time evinced the possession of high and commanding abilities. Limited as has been our inclination of absenting political transactions, we could not fail observing political transactions, we could not fail to notice the brilliant progress of Mr. F. Environed to notice the bindant progress of an 'bold, bad men,' by the jealousy of cliques, and "bold, bad men,' for a time his enemies secretly imagined that they had prostrated the "Country Boy;" but he comoverthrew their machinations, and estal ished his own claims to sagacity, and consummat skill as a political leader.

In the abstract we have little confidence in politicians. Our unsophisticated nature has taught us, that faith is a fragile matter with men who speculate in political expediencies; and when might makes right, honesty blushingly hides its face But to all, there is something noble in an enthu siastic man; something really worthy of admiration in the man who consecrates soul, heart and nind to the cause which he has espoused. In our day too many politicians conceal their principles under the portico of the palace of Mammon; and we have known some men, high in the eyes of the world, and loud in self laudation, who were as cheap as putty, and as flexible as oakum, when placed in the political market. Such men we never shall

But our friend Forney holds no allegiance with the corrupt gangs who infest the political arenas of a large city. For they hate, if not fear the man; and for the same reason, we admire, and shall never hesitate to defend him. We care very little for political prejudices of any complexion, but we should be recreant to duty did we besitate to join voice, in justice to an individual who has done more for the trade of this city, than all the "commercial mammoths" which we possess. gentlemen of the Democratic party elect John W Forney clerk of the next House of Representatives The South should support him as the gallant de-fender of her peculiar institutions, and the North will sustain him because he dared to oppose a set of bitter abelitionists who were striving to perver our sentiments and our patriotism.—Sunday Globe

Increase of the State Debt.

The American and other Federal prints are prating very much about their hostility to an increase of the State debt, and allege that the Democrats in the Legislature last winter wanted to make a loan of $250,000. They forget, however, to tell the people that Mr. Konigmacher introduced an amend ment to the appropriation bill of last session, to make a new relief loan of one million of dollars, appropriating $400,000 of this sum to the North Branch canal, $300,000 to avoid the Mountain planes, and $300,000 to improve the Columbia railroad. And every Federal Whig in the Senate voted tor this amendment—carried it, and sent the appropriation bill to the House with this increase of the State debt of one million of dollars in it. Nay, more, it was given out by the special friends of Gov. Johnston, in the House, that unless the Democrats agreed to Mr. Konigmacher's amendment ocrats agreed to Mr. Ronigmacuer's amendment, the bill would be vetoed. Thus it will be seen that it was the Federal Whigs who were in lavor of increasing the State debt last winter, and that, too, to the tune of one million of dollars.—Demo-

A Speck of WAR.—The news from Mexico, in reference to the expulsion of the American Surveying Party from the Isthmus of Tenhantepec, has created a great sensation in New Orleans. DB. JOHNSTON,

Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Graduate from one of the most eminent Colleges of the United States and the greater part of whose life has been spent in the Hospitals of London, Paris, Philadelphia, and elsewhere, has affected some of the most astonishing cures that were ever known. Many troubled with ringing in the cars and head when asleep, great nervousness, being alarmed at sudden sounds, and bashfulness, with frequent blushing, attended, sometimes, with derangement of mind, were cured immediately.

TAKE PARTICULAR NOTICE.

Dr. J. addresses all those who have injured DR. JOHNSTON, themselves by private and improper indulgencies, that secret and solitary habits, which ruin both body and mind, unfitting them for either business body and mind, unitting them for eather obsainess or society.

These are some of the sad and melancholy effects produced by early habits of youth, viz. Weakness of the back and limbs, Pains in the head, Dimness of Sight, Loss of Muscular Power, Palpitation of the Heart, Dyspepsia, Nervous Irriuability, Derangement of the Digestive Functions, General Debility, Symptoms of Consumption, &c. Mentally.—The learful effects on the mind are much to be dreaded: Loss of Memory, Confusion of Ideas, Depression of Spirits, Evil of Foreboding, Aversion of Society, Sell Distrust, Love of Solitude, Timidity, &c., are some of the evils produced.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Weakness of the system, Nervous Debility and prematures eachy generally arises from the destructive habit of youth, that solitary practice so fatal to the healthful existence of man, and it is the young who are the most apt to become its Victims from an ignorance of the dangers to which they subject themselves. Parents and Guardians are often misled with respect to the cause or source of disease in their sons and wards. Alas! how often do they ascribe to other causes the wasting of the frame, Palpitation of the Heart, Dyspepsia, Indigesion, Derangement of the Nervous System, Cough and Symptonis of Consumption, also those scrious NERVOUS DEBILITY. Derangement of the Nervous System, Congn and Symptoms of Consumption, also those scrious Mental effects, such as loss of Memory, Depression of Spirits or peculiar fits of Melancholy, when the truth is they have been caused by indulging Pernicious but alluring practices, destructive to both Body and Mind. Thus are swept from existence thousands who might have been of use to their country, a pleasure to their friends, an ornament to society.
