Song of Life.

BY CHARLES MAKAY. A traveller on the dusty road

- Strewed acorns on the lea;
 And one took root and sprouted up, And grew into a tree. And grew into a tree.

 Love sought its shade at even time,

 To breathe its early vows,

 And age was pleased, in heats of noon,

 To bask beneath its boughs.

 The dormouse loved its dangling twigs,
- The birds sweet music bore,
- A little spring had lost its way
 Amid the grass and fern—
 A passing stranger scoped the well
 Where weary wen might turn
 He walled it in, and hung with care
 A ladle on the brink.
 He thought not of the deed he did,
 But index that tall might disk
- But judg's that toil might drink,
 He passed again—and lo! the well,
 By summers never dried,
 Had cooled ten thousand parching tongues,
 And saved a life besides!
- A nameless man, amid a crowd,
- That throng'd the daily mart,
 Let fall a word of hope and love.
 Unstudied, from the heart,
 A whisper on the tumult thrown,
- A transitory breath. It raised a brother from the dust.
- It saved a soul from death.
- O, germ! O, fount! O, word of love!
 O, thought at random cast!
 Ye were but little at the first,
 But might at the little. But mighty at the last.

A Stranger's Tale: OR, THE DEATH OF THE RIGHTEOUS.

There is an indescribably pleasant melancholy attendant on the bright sunny morning of a Sab-bath in summer, to an individual who is among strangers. A solemn stillness pervades every thing; lovely works nature seem to put on a spect. The feathered songsters breathe sacred aspect. forth their melody in subdued strains; and the distant waterfall, now swelling to a deep base under-tone, and now diminishing till the listening ear scarcely perceives its sound as the breeze increases the impressive pause the more deep—the more impressive. Perhaps this is all imagination; be it so; at any rate it is a feeling which has again and again touched the finer sensibilities of the soul, and mellowed down the rough exterior which human nature most unavoidably assumes, by a contact with the numberless perplexities attendant on the tumult and the bustle of the week. If ever man is capable of one holy emotion—if ever susceptible any seelings kindred to angels, it must be at such a time, and under such circumstances. I had arrived late on the previous evening in the city of ——, and taken one of the most retired lodgings I could find. Exhausted with fatigue of travelling. I sought rest, and was not disturbed till the bells from the dome of the neighboring edifice announced the dawning of the Sabbath. For the first time, I looked from my window. It opened toward the east; and the clouds upon the horizon, a long distance, were tinged with a golden hue which as the eye wandered from the noint of the sun's approach, gradually became less and less rich until they were finally exchanged for the mild blue of the sky beyond.

Directly by me, a broad sheet of water rolled majestically; and, being calm, reflected from its own bosom the beauties delineated in the heaver above. Beyond its further bank opened an extensive prospect in the adjoining country, sufficiently near for me to see the birds sporting from bough to bough, and now and then to hear the carol of ning songs. About me, the spires from the churches of a populous city lifted themselves seemingly, as sentries to the numerous inhabitants below them. To all these I was a stranger; not friend; not one was there on whom I could ex change the salutation of sympathy. No wonder then, if my thoughts reverted to the circle of my own home—no wonder that the scene before me had produced that inclancholy I have before de-

The breakfast bell rang, and I descended to the large dining room, not in a mood to join in the conversation that was introduced. I encountered strange faces on every side, and exchanging civil-ities with whose in my immediate vicinity, indulged in my own musings during the meal, and then o my own room to meditate unnoticed same communion with my Saviour as then; would that the "fever of the world " might always be, as then, subdued.

This was one of the bright spots that light th vale of life; and, like every other ravishing pleasure in the world, designed to be of short duration. Time passed unheeded; and before I was aware of it, the hour of worship had arrived, and I descended to the street. But I could not divest myself of the train of thoughts I had been indulging. The streets were thronged with passengers; and without knowing whither I went, I followed the multitude. I soon found myself treading the carpeted aisle of a spacious church. I entered a pew, which was opened to me, and sat down to the deep swelling tones of the organ, as its keys were swept by master's hand, alone aroused me from my rever, and told me I was in the house of God. The voiof song ascended in rich harmony from the choir in the gallery above, and directly behind me and then erose the holy man of God, who poured forth the desires of his heart, in one of the most soul stirring petitions it ever fell to my lot to hear.

One might almost feel himself to be in the presence of the King of kings, and see the bright seraphim bowing before the throne. Another hym was rung, and the minister of the sanctuary read from Psalm 119th: "I will pay my vows unto the voice, as he expatiated on the character of God. falling upon the ears of his hearers, at once pre possessed them in favor of the speaker, and con vinced that he uttered the language of a warm and generous heart; while at the same time the infinite greatness of the subject he advocated, was brought home to the mind with an unwonted force. He he law of God in all its holiness and purity, and thundered forth its awful denunciations against the ungodly; while at the same time,

The Gospel whispered peace. He looked back on the little band that were led by the Saviour, tracing the history of the church down to the present time; and showed that Gor teit himself without a witness. He pointed to the sacred emblems before him nemorial of the covenant into which his own flock had entered; and entreated them to be as wise as serpents and as harmless as doves,"

-" in strains as sweet as angels use of the high vocation wherewith they had been called," "redeeming the time because the days arrevit." He closed the book, and descended the stairs of the pulpit, and requested the candidates to offer themselves for the baptismal rite. For a moment a breathless silence pervaded the assembly: when the door behind me opened and looking around I saw the form of a maider slowly walking up the aisle. Such a countenance

I had never before seen. A modest blush occa-sioned by the agitation of the scene, was diffused over her levely features; while the expression of her dark eyes seemed almost unearthly. Is it possible, thought I, that this young and beautiful creature can forsake the gay circles of pleasure, and put the sanctity of religion? Can it be true, that she has so far triumphed over the vanities of the world, as to be willing to identify herself with a band of christians, often alumniated, often made the by word of the votteres of leasure? Ay, lwas true. She had tasted the bless. She had drunk deep of its alluring, tempting, flow:—

till presently it turned

To woman we look for all that can adorn and beautify the character; for the cultivation of the social sympathies of our nature; for all that is social sympathies of our nature; for all that is generous and ennobling.

And we are seldom disappointed. But if to this be added the glowing flame of piety, a ten fold charm is diffused over the whole character. Such were my reflections. And now once more the voice of prayer ascended to heaven, and the congregation dispersed. I returned to my lodgings, and spent the remainder of the day in solitude.

The ensuing day I resumed my journey, and for several weeks was continually shifting scenes; now rattling over the craggy, rocky cliff in the tiresome stage coach, now rolling swiftly over the level track of a railway, now again on the crowded deck of a steamboat, gliding smoothly over the bosom of the unruffled waters.

But wherever I had been, or in whatever situation of reflection, that form, that face, and that scene, when I was the source of the complete of the complete of the control of reflection, that form, that face, and that scene, when I was a source of the control of the complete of the control of reflection, that form, that face, and that scene, when I was I w of reflection, that form, that face and that scene, were still before me. Why it was I know not; but the more I tried to banish its recollections, the more vivid would be its delineations to my mind. On a Sunday evening, five weeks after the event, as the sun's last declining rays lingered on the hills again entered that city, and searched out my old

The coming morning was of almost unclouded splendor. The heavens bore much the same appearance, as when a few weeks previous, I had viewed them from this place; and I indulged in similar thoughts and feelings, with the exception, that now there was one at least among the vast multitude, whom, if I met, I should recognise; and when although unconsciously, had awakened the who, although unconsciously, had awakened the who, although unconsciously, had awakened the strong sympathies of my soul. When the hour of public worshipdrew near, I had joined in the praises of the Most High. 1 entered, and seated myself as before. Soon the organ's swell echoed through the courts of the Lord's house, but it was a requiem strain. The dissonance of its notes produced a

The doors opt ed, and a train of mourners advanced, clad in the habiliments of sorrow.
Then followed a bier, on which was borne a rich mahogany coffin, covered with a deep sable pall, that reached the floor. The organ ceased its sound; for a moment a death like silence pervaded the trace. house; then the voice of weeping burst forth, which till now had been stifled in the wounded breast, or had found vent in silerit tears. A singular sensation came, over me. I felt assured that the coffin before me contained the lovely form, which I had so lately seen in the same spot in magnificence and beauty. The assurance haunted me. I tried in vain to make myself believe that I me. I tried in vain to make mysen believe that of was superstitious; I saw in my mind the seal of death upon that brow, and dreaded to have the sion to return their sincere thanks to their friends for the very liberal patronage heretofore received, truth revealed. A prayer was offered—a mournful direct was chaunted—and the minister began his direct was chaunted—and the minister began his true. truth revealed. A prayer was offered—a mournful dirge was chaunted—and the minister began his discourse in the words, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." There was no studied, elaborate eulogy on the character of the departed; no attempts at display or effect; but a simple recital of her worth and virtues. When he spoke of the many and her labors of love in the midst of them, the whole congregation seemed melted, and the speaker gave full scope to his emotions in suitable sobs.—

He exhorted the young especially to make wis improvements of this voice of God, speaking a rectly to them; and showed them that, though called to an early grave, if, like her, they were prepared for the coming of the Son of man, it would be to them a change of unspeakable joy. A law Sabbatha before, she who is now orpse, had stood up and ayowed the Lord Jehovah to be her God, and now, without doubt, her spirit had entered upon an eternal Sabbath of rest in The mourners rose, and slowly moved from the sanctuary. The assembly one by one followed; and silently looked on the face of the dead as they passed. I approached. An awful shivering seiz ie, and the cold sweat gathered on my forehead. I knew that my darkest fears were about being tested, and I trembled. I raised my eys and beheld that countenance; it was the same! A gentle smile still played upon the features, and no marks of suffering were there. Those lips seemed on the point of speaking, but they were closed forever.—

A space of time elapsed—but what had passed I I had been lost in reflection, forced upon me by the awful change that had taken place, and had no recollection till I found myself in the midst of a large crowd in the churchyard. The sculptured urns and monuments, that had been reared to mark the places where reposed the remains of parents, children, and friends, rose on every side. Directly in front was a long range of gran tombs. One near the centre was open, and around it the throng was assembled. I heard the sound of music—it was the last funeral hymn:—

Sister like the flower at morning Thou hast gone from us away; Brightest hues that flower adorning Withered lie, while yet 'tis day.

Thou shalt rest secured from anguish, In thy narrow house below; While alone, our fond hearts languish, That no more thy smiles we know. Sleep then sister! while above thee Flows the sad and silent tear; Oft at eve, shall those that love thee

Weep and pray unnoticed here. The last lingering note of that plaintive melody lied away upon the breeze, as the procession of looked up; the large concourse of people had gone, and I was alone in this wast city of the dead. I turned from the spot, and offered up the fervent prayer, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Weakness of the system, Nervous Debility and premature decay generally arises from the destructive habit of youth, that solitary practice so fatal to the healthful existence of man, and it is the young who are the most apt to become its Victims from an ignorance of the dangers to which they subject themselves. Parents and Guardians are often misled with respect to the cause or source of disease in their sons and wards. Alas! how often do they ascribe to other causes the wasting of the frame, Palpitation of the Heart, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Derangement of the Nervous System, Cough and Symptoms of Consumption, also those serious Mental effects, such as loss of Melancholy, when the truth is they have been caused by Indulging Pernicious but alluring practices, destructive to both Body and Mind.
