THE BRIDAL; OR THE CLIFF OF DEATH. BY WM. B. BATTEN.

In the northern part of Germany stands an old pile of buildings known as Marl's castle, of which the following story is related:

Many years ago it was inhabited by the noble Count Westel, who had betrothed his daughter Miss Westel to Sir Hubert Kandorf.

"You forget that your father has resolved that you must this night marry Sir Hubert, and even now the castle is crowded with guests; and hark!

"This is dreadful," replied Gertrude. "Wait until the next flash of lightning and then see if you cannot discern a horse and rider in the northern grove."

"Come love, lose not a moment—let us fly or we shall be pursued and overtaken. My Mountain Lion is at hand, and we may take it as the need of the wind to a safe retreat, where the foot of no man save myself has ever trod, and where they will be unable to reach us; will you go with me?"

"Yes, Walter—wherever thou wilt, I will go." "Ah, hush, Marion, but we have no time for sweet words, let us haste to mount and be gone."

golf, but out of the thirty, four only succeeded, the rest sunk in the dark chasm to rise no more.

"Stay, fleeing miscreant, for though you have escaped the thunderbolt of Heaven, yet you shall not escape from my good sword and revenge, for know that I am your rival, Sir Hubert Kandorf, and in an hour hence, you shall lay in the waters from which I have just escaped.

"The approving look of her own sweet eyes was all the response he required, and pressing his lips to those of the beautiful girl, he sought his secret abode, and the next morning he was seated in the carriage with the lady Marion, and lived many years in happiness.

OF THE ANCIENT AND MODERN LONDON. Of the millions that will make their brief sojourn in the British metropolis the present season, few are so well informed as to the sources of instruction beyond the wonders and curiosities of London of the present.

There is hardly a spot in Europe which has been more completely obliterated, as London. Scarcely a stone remains upon a stone of the London of the Plantagenets. Time which has spared the Acropolis, has spared the Colosseum, has spared the Pyramids, but it has spared nothing of the London of the seventeenth century.

And when we come to look for earlier monuments of the eventful history of London—such as we find in profusion at every step of progress through Rome, and numerous other cities of the continent—yet we find ourselves almost as widely separated from primitive Europe as from the present.

THE subscribers to the Intelligencer acquire their friends and the public, that they've made such arrangements with a house in the city of Philadelphia, as will enable them to execute orders for the purchase and sale of

A WILD BOAR KILLED IN GEORGIA.—On the 23d ultimo, says the Savannah News, a very large wild boar was killed in the plantation of Mrs. Mary Smith, six miles from the town of Milledgeville.

LA Yankee has just invented a method to catch rats. He says: "Locate your bed in a room much infested by these animals, and on retiring, put out the light. Then strew over your pillow some strong smelling cheese, three or four rats' herrings, or some barley meal or new meal, and a sprinkling of dried codfish. Keep awake till you find the rats at work, and then make a grab."

The Girl I have beside me. The advice of men will never bind me, Who say that I will never be true.

To her I left, when I'm away, Some youth his hand may offer; And who, that woman knows, will say, She won't accept of his offer?

For I, no matter where I stray, Must still have one to cheer me; And not those damsel's airy way, Who once has said she'll never see me.
