The New York Courier and Enquirer, in noticing the first appearance of the renowned Lola Montez, at the Broadway Theatre, on Monday night, says: "Though the audience was large, it was not at all brilliant, owing to the almost entire absence o ladies; the appearance of the house being rather that presented at a political meeting, than a theatrical entertainment. She was received with vociferous applause upon her first appearance, but succeeded in arousing no marks of very warm adm ration during the performance. As a dance has not much merit, and we believe has achieved much reputation. Her person is slight almost to meagerness; her eyes and hair very fine, and the expression of her face very seductive." Webb is, no doubt, induced to write thus slightingly of Lola, on account of her hostility to Austria and friendship for perfect liberty. The Herald of last evening, thus discourses on the same sub-

"In a tew minutes he made her appearance of the staircase, representing a winding path down a mountain, when she was greeted with tremendous She remained on the spot for some time applause. She remained on the spot of some of the courtesying low to the audience, who continued to applaud her for several minntes. She then descended gracefully, and on reaching the stage, was received with another burst of applause, which she again acknowledged with a lady-like bow. She was neatly dressed as a Tyrolean; she looked very was neatly dressed as a Tyrolean; she looked very thin and girlish—far younger than she is; in fact, not more than sixteen years. She has an uncommon face; it is of an aristocratic mould, and mien, and there is something fascinating in the expression. But she is not so very beautiful after all.—Her eye is a fine blue, which, is set off by beautifully arched brows; but her mouth is by no means pretty. Her chin and neck, however, are fine.—Her form is fragrile and slender, and her movements and attitudes are very graceful. There is ments and attitudes are very graceful. There is a natural ease in her step which is charming. Neither her legs nor feet have anything remarkable about them. Her leg is rather common, and her foot certainly neither andalusian or diminutive.— The colored engravings in the shop windows are not like her. She is not so en bon point or so tleshy

as they represent her.
"The whole performance lasted exactly 40 min utes, and just concluded at 9 o'clock. When the curtain fell, she was called for with great vehemence, and on coming in tront, was received with great cheering. She said in a weak voice, and rather foreign acc-nt, pronouncing the article "the" as "de"—"Ladies and gentleman—I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the very kind reception you have given me, a poor stranger, in your noble land." She then withdrew.
"Her dances were short and simple, and she per-formed nothing that could be called a feat. None of these performances were her peculiar Spanish dances, in which she excels. As a dansense, she is decidedly inferior to Cerito, Madame Augusta, and others, but there is a nameless grace of nature about others, but there is a harderess grace or matter about her person and movements, which, with her history, gives her an attraction that a better artist could not command, but which, however, is not destined to be very lasting."

Progress of Steam Navigation.

The New York Courier introduces statistics of the steam marine of that port, with some interesting remarks from which we extract what follows: Fifty years ago, all intercourse among nations Fifty years ago, an intercourse among nathous was conducted upon the same general principles which had governed intercourse eighteen hundred years before. In trade, time and experience had introduced no new elements. In maritime affairs little had been added which did not partake of the stamp of commerce at its infancy; and even in th cut of a sail-the shape of a helm-such a thing as departure from established usage was regarded with distrust, and treated as a dangerous innovation. But all these things have undergone change Steam and electricity, as mechanical agents, have dissolved the fetters of ignorance, and opened the doors to enterprise. We are no longer hearmed in by continents. The genius of industry and inter

Course stalks throughout the universe.

In a paper before us, the Postmaster General at Philadelphia, writes to his Deputy at Boston that owing to arrangements I have entered into, the mail from one city will reach the other in about three weeks, which is a saving of several days time," and now the distance is performed in eleve to thirteen hours. About the year 1828, the whis tle of the first locumotive in the United States was heard. Now our canals and railroads, it united would circumnavigate the globe. Ten years ago, the first telegraph pole was erected. What do we witness at this hour? Wires stretching from continent to continent, and connecting by a single manipulation-an intelligible, speaking vibration the East with the West—Europe with Asia—the shores of the Pacific with the shores of the At lantic.

But the application of steam to navigation excites equal wonderment. Its mission is lost in the future, but what a profound page do we already ponder upon! On the 3d day of October, 1807, the steamer for the Hudson river trade, was launch-This was the earliest practicable attempt in ed. This was the earnest practicable account the United States. The steamer Comet, launch at Glasgow, in 1811, four years after, and intended for the navigation of the Clyde, was the first prac-tical attempt in England. At the close of 1849, service, 1.147 steam vessels while in the United States, up to the same period, there had been built 2,600 of all classes, including our toreign steamers. The voyage of the ocean, between New York, prior to 1811, was a 3 month's performance; now the distance is overcome in less than ten days. Even with steam, the trip from New Orleans to Pittsburg, required 28 days, while now it is performed in seven. From Dublin to Holyhead, in 1830, when Great Britain esteemed her appliances as next to perfect, eight hours were consumed, which now require but three and a quarter. And such, in the brief space of forty-five years, has been the progress of this indispensable agent. The first steamship which crossed the At-lantic was the Sirius, from Liverpool, arriving in our harbor on the 23d of April, 1838, and shortly after, on the same day, the Great Western, from Bristol, both vessels making the passage in little less time than would at present be required by one of our fastest clippers. This was the origin of the steam mail service between the United States and Great Britain, which has become an element in our maritime progress of such consequence.

Despatches have been received at the State Department from Mr. Rives up to the 18th ult., which express the oninion that the coup d'etat of Louis Napoleon was a complete revolutionary movement, and furnish details similar to those already published. Mr. Rives and the Swiss minister were the only members of the diplomatic corps who had declined to attend the President's levees, and the latter had finally resolved to present himself. The views of the Administration on the whole subject will be forwarded to Mr. Rives immediately.

FATAL Accident.-On Monday morning last man named Samuel Marks, a resident of Mount Pleasant, was killed on the railroad near that place by being run over. It is thought that he was valking in the track, and when he heard the morning train coming, he stepped (as he supposed) out of the way, instead of which he got into the track and was knocked down by the engine, and killed immediately. It was yet dark at the time the accident happened, and consequently the engineer did not see the unfortunate man until it was too late not see the unfortunate man until it was too late to stop the engine. An inquest was held on the body by J. W. Fisher, Esq., and a verdict rendered by the jury of "death by being run over on the railroad."—Columbia Spy.

Kossuth and Gorgey.

While Kossuth is receiving the enthusiastic sympathy, admiration and assistance of the people of England and the United States, Gorgey, the other great leader of the Hungarian war of Independence, drags on a lonely and monotonous existence at Klagenfurth, in Carinthia, a city much resorted to by pensioned officers of the Austrian army. The nsioned officers of the Austrian army. The New York Tribune says:

There he lives with his family, consisting of his wife, a single child, now but three months old, a woman servant, and a soldier, who was his attend ant through the war: He sees little society, hard ly a family of the city having sought his acquaint ance. He has but one intimate friend and that i an Englishman. His time is passed in studying chemistry and physics, and his chief amusement lecturing upon physical chemistry to a few persons
Of money he has plenty; from the Austrian govern ment he receives a yearly pension of 3,000 floring and from that of Russia he has received 60,000 sil ver rubles. He is very rarely seen in public; abou once a month his wife prevails on him to take walk for the sake of his health, but in general h avoids appearing abroad. The common people r gard him with aversion. gard him with aversion.

The contrast in the present condition of these two great leaders of Hungary, is no greater than the contrast in their characters and conduct. Each sendowed with eminent abilities, and each had opportunities seldom allotted to man. Kossuth was faithful to his country and to liberty; Gorgey betrayed both. The one never filled so large place in the esteem and affections of the civilize world as now; the other is despised and deserted. The patriot as well as the traitor has his reward.
