It Snows. BY MRS. S. J. HALE.

"It snows!" cries the school-boy, "Hurrah!" and his shout

Is ringing through parlor and hall,
While, swilt as the wings of the swallow he shout
And his playmates have answered his call!
It makes the heart leap but to witness their joys—

Proud wealth has no pleasure, I trow, Like the rapture that throbs in the breast of the

Then lay not the trapping of gold on thine heirs,
While health and the riches of nature are theirs.

"It snows!" cries the belle, "dear, how lucky!" and turns
From her mirror to watch the flakes fall; Like the first rose in summer her dimpled cheel

While musing on sleigh ride and ball—
There are visions of coquets, of splendor and

"It snows!" cries the widow, "Oh God!"

How stiffed the voice of her prayer,

Its burden ye'll read in her tear swollen eyes,
On her cheek sunk with fasting and care;
'Tis night—and her fatherless ask her for bread—
But "He gives the young ravens their food,"
And she truste, till her dark hearth adds sorrow to

THE BRILLIANT LOCKET.

A STORY FROM REAL LIFE. CHAPTER 1.

It was in the autumn of the year 1800, when the republican army under Ney, Moreau, Lamb, Cyr, and other of its bravest generals, was pursuing its victorious career, and laving waste some of the most important towns in Germany, the circumstance that we are about to relate took place.

The frequent want of stores, ammunition and money, in the republican armies, and the hope of plunder, then so frequently held out to the French soldiers as the reward of victory, caused no inconsiderable alarm in the breaats of the more peaceable inhabitants of those places which were considered likely to become the theatre of hostilities.

Among these, the inhabitants of a German town of considerable importance-and which for distinction we will call Ebristien-had ample reason for their misgivings; the daily, sulmost hourly approach of the French being expected.

The family of Paul Kinmayer, a merchant citizen of wealth, was among those most agitated by the afflicting intelligence. His household consisted of his wife, an only daughter, and a few domestics in whom he could place confidence. His daughter of which he was one of the few survivors. His was the spring which regulated every action of age could not have exceed thirty, but the dreadful the merchant's life. She was the apple of his eye, the sunshine of his shady places, for her he had accumulated his wealth, that her rare beauty might win with it a station of rank and influence, and the hope of a whole lifetime might be wrecked in

His wife was the first to suggest a plan of concealment of their treasures. Their mansion was situated near the extremity of the town, and from it a secret passage communicated with a bower in the garden adjoining; from thence, in the evening, a man might easily steal unperceived to the adja cent woods; and there she proposed that the merchant should at night time hery his treasure or at any rate, that he should proceed through the forest and deposit it with a relation who was to be trusted, who would not be suspected of possessing so much wealth, and who resided about two days'

For a time, Paul Kinmayer resisted every importunity of his wife. Who would protect them should the anticipated attack take place in his absence! 'The domestics were old and infirm, and they would be too much alarmed for their own safety to care much for others not akin to them .-But when his wife spoke upon the future; when she impressed on him that it was wealth only that would be required of them, and that, deprived of that, all for which they had so struggled, would be scattered in a moment, his resolution gave way.

"I go," said he, " and leave you in the trust of one whose all-powerful hand will protect you; unless, indeed, in his infinite wisdom, he deems it fitting that the innocent should fall as an example and terror to the guilty." Collecting all that was most valuable into small packet, as the evening approached, the merchant was prepared to depart. One jewel only remained behind-it was his own miniature, set in a locket, with diamonds of great value. It was his wedding gift to Amelia, and with it he hesita ted to part, and he placed it again around her neck with the same fervor and affection that he felt when he first presented it. To her and to his daughter, the namesake of her mother, he gave some ne cessary direction for their welfare during his ab sence, and taking an affectionate farewell, he departed unknown to any but themselves

It was in the evening of the fourth day after the merchant had departed, that the roll of the drums. and the shrill voice of the trumpet among the inhabitants without, proclaimed to the inmates of the mansion that the enemy was fast approaching.-The town, was indeed, filled with the Austrian troops; but these had been so often and lately harrassed and defeated by the victorious arms of the French, that it was not without reason the citizens felt strong misgivings in their prowess,

All chance of the merchant being enabled t reach his house, or even to obtain admittance with in town previous to the termination, was now en tirely shut out. The wife had but little doubt that his reputed wealth would not permit the house to pass unmolested; and after causing the house to be barricaded, the windows and shutters secured, she then proceeded with her daughter to the inner most apartment of the mansion.

CHAPTER II.

On the return of the merchant, the French army you knew Ebriestien?

was evacuating the place, carrying with them the trophies they had wrested from the conquered Austrians, and a large supply of stores and plunder from the devoted town. Paul's heart died within him as he stealthily entered the suburbs, and proceeded towards the place of his residence.

were open storehouses rifled of their contents, the gardens of the richer classes broken down and trampled over; in the market places were groups of the middle and lower classes, loudly complaining of the excesses of Austria and France. Still Paul stopped not to join in the general outcry; his only anxiety was his own home. At length he reached his dwelling. With what a pang of intense anxiety he rushed in through the open portal! The servants had evidently fled; the stairs bore the marks of heavy footsteps. Paul stopped not to examine them, or he would have seen that they were traced

With the speed of thought he rushed into the accustomed sitting-room, and there a horrid spectacle awaited him. On the ground lay his wife stabbed through the heart; one hand had fallen back as if to protect her from the attack of the assassin, while the other grasped tightly a few links of the slight gold chain to which had been attached the diamond-mounted portrait.

Of his daughter, there was no trace. Loudly did he call, and wildly did he seek, first in his own house, and then through the whole of the town, until it was whispered abroad that he was mad: and so, for a time, he was; but anxiety brought

There are visions of coquets, or sprengy and mirth,
Floating over the drear winter's day;
But the tidings of hope on the storm beaten earth,
Will melt, like the smowt flakes, away—
Turn, turn thee to heaven, fair maiden, for bliss—
That world has a pure fount ne'er opened in this.

That world has a pure fount ne'er opened in this.

The description of reconstruction of the miniature with the other valuables, need not be related, since he little doubted that his wife's resistance to part with it led to the fatal catastrophe. One redeeming thought only flashed across his mind, that by its agency-if, indeed, she had not shared the fate of her motherhe might be enabled to discover the missing daugh ter. To this end, he resolved to devote the whole of his future existence; and after the funeral of his wife, he disposed of his house, the wreck of his household goods, and prepared to travel; whither, be knew not but anywhere to fly from the scenes where all his hopes of happines had been blighted by the ruthless hand of the destroyer.

"And these," he said, as he turned from his native town and home, "are the deeds perpetrated under the sacred banner of liberty !- Alas! how is the divine attribute desecrated !- How little but the name exists in the blood-thirsty dynasty of France!

Shall we follow the steps of Paul Kimmayer for welve years? Shall we relate how he travelled in strange lands, even in the wake of the Frenharmy -sometimes in disguise-how minute, but yet how cautious were his inquires, and, alas! how fruitless? Shall we say how the hale man grew grey and feeble as though half a century had passed over his head in scarcely more than a tithe of one! No: for we could relate nothing that would interest the reader-nothing but the patient suffering of a bereaved man; hoping, but hopeless-seeking, but proved, and Paul was sentenced to death. finding it not; until it almost seemed that the faculties of the wanderer had ceased to embrace the original object of his mission; but they did notthey only slumbered. It was something beyond twelve years after the scene related in our second chapter took place, that a French officer was reciting, in one of the principal cases of Paris, to an eager crowd of listeners, the particulars of an inglorious retreat from Russia, hardships of the Russian campaign had told fearfully upon his hardened features. War, however had not tamed, but had evidently added to, a natu- ture of three of these "varmints." rally ferocious disposition; for he was detailing, with satisfaction, the horrid torments of the enemy already forgetful of the severities he had just escafallen a sacrifice.

His influence obtained for me a commission; and, one, if he lives. crowned with success, I found no difficulty in earning for myself promotion. In the action alluded o, we were allowed but two hours to make what pillage we could in the town of Ebriestien before we proceeded onward to greater and more gloriou ictories. Well, there was a jeweller of great wealth, whose house was pointed out to me by an ustrian prisoner: we entered, but in which neithjewels nor portable valuables could we find .-The servants fled on our first entrance; the wife and daughter alone remained. The latter had locked themselvs in a room, which we soon burst open; ve demanded of them their valuables; the trumpet had already sounded to horse!' and I was prepaing to leave the house, when a gold chain around the neck of the elder female attracted my attention. There was attached to it-"

"A portrait " asked the stranger, in a tone of l-concealed anxiety.

"Don't interrupt me," said the narrator: "the ory is droller than any would imagine." The blood of the stranger came and went rapidly, and putting down his pipe, he was observed, for the moment feeling about his pocket, as if in search of some missing article.

"You're right, it was a portrait; and in a most aluable setting. Provoked at obtaining no booty, demanded it of her; she should have had the vorthless miniature, but she was obstinate. I ried to force it from her, but she resisted; nay, more, she tried to seize a pistol from my belt, and in the heat of my passion, I stabbed her."

" Have you that portrait still "? asked the Ger-"I have; though it has been taken from the set ting, in which one of my own glitters You said

"He is-to be the avenger!" And before Within the town was confusion and dismay, here movement was observed by the bystanders, Paul Kinmayer had, with fatal precision, levelled a very doors torn from their binges; there, the trim pistol at the French officer, and shot him in the

Mortally wounded, but not dead, he, who had braved the heat of a hundred battles, and whom death had spared that he might make more suitable atonement for his guilt, was carefully removed to a private apartment. Paul, who might have escaped in the confusion, lid not attempt to do so, and he was, of course, taken into custody, and incarcerated in one of the ungeons of the police.

The following morning he was led forth foi examination; the wife of the fallen officer, he was told, would be the accuser. But he walked with a irmer step and a lighter heart than usual. One portion of his mission had been accomplished; he had avenged his wife's murder, but he found no traces of his daughter.

On reaching the place of examination, he was commanded to stand; a shriek-a long, agonizing shriek-was heard, and the prosecutrix fell sense less on the floor.

Restoratives were applied, and on her recovery, the cause of her agitation was soon apparent: "It is my father!" she said, and breaking thro the crowd, she again tell senseless in his arms. The impetus of her fall caused a locket to drop from her bosom, where it was still suspended by a chain. Paul Kinmayer snatched it up. Yes, it was the same-the circlet of brilliants; but now it contained the portrait of-whom? of his daugher's husband-the murderer of his wife!

Passing her to one of the attendants, the old man smote his breast, and called aloud in his

"Was it for this thou wert perceived, my beau tiful, my pure?" In consequence of the state of the witness, the examination was postponed, and the same evening the dying man requested that the prisoner, together with the chief of police, might attend him.

On their arrival, life was ebbing fast. The con fession of the officer was brief; he admitted the murder of Paul's wife, and the justice of the retribution; he further confessed that the daughter, be ing almost a child, was carried away by the sol diers to the rear of the army, that she was forced from the apartment previous to, and knew nothing of her mother's fate; and that, repenting of his act, he had her conveyed to Paris, and educated her at his own charge. With her years her loveliness in creased; and she, only known to him as a benefac tor, at last consented to marry him.

This confession was attested and forwarded to the Emperor. Meanwhile the friends of the officer came forward as prosecutors, his wife refusing to do so. The murder in the latter case was fully

A Panther Hunt.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger furnishes them with the following details of the cap

Three young men of Brady township, Clearfield county, Pa., named Jackson Long, Joseph Dale and Joab Ogdea, pursued three panthers, and the first ped, and to which so many of his comrades had day they overtook them; a small dog which they had along, treed the two young panthers, which they shot. Night coming on, the men made a fire stranger, who sat, almost unnoticed, smoking in and remained all night on the track of the old panan obscure corner of the room; an involuntary ex- ther. Next morning they renewed the pursuit, pression of disgust, at length betrayed him, and all and, in a wind-fall, got within a few feet of the old panther, when she ran off, at full speed. Some "I'll wager a Napoleon," said the officer, "that time after they came to a hole among the rocks, the old German never smelt powder but on a re- in which the panther had entered. NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Weakness of the system, Nervous Debility and premature decay generally arises from the destructive habit of youth, that solitary practice so fatal to the healthful existence of man, and it is the young who are the most apt to become its Victims from an ignorance of the dangers to which they subject themselves. Pareris and Guardians are often misled with respect to the cause or source of disease in their sons and wards. Alas! how often do they ascribe to other causes the wasting of the frame, Palpiniation of the Heart, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Derangement of the Nervous System, Cough and Symptoms of Consumption, also those actions Mental effects, such as loss of Memory, Depression of Spirits or peculiar fits of Melancholy, when the truth is they have been caused by indulging Pernicious but alluring practices, destructive to both Body and Mind. Thus are swept from existence thousands who might have been of use to their country, a pleasure to their friends, an ornament to society.

their country, a pleasure to their trients, an ornation to society.

WEAKNESS OF THE ORGANS immediately cured and full vigor restored.

Oh, how happy have hundreds of misguided youths been made, who have been suddenly restored to health from the devastations of those terrific maladies which result from indiscretion. Such persons, before contemplating MARRIAGE, should reflect that a sound mind and body are the most necessary requisites to promote communication.

should reflect that a sound mind and body are the most necessary requisites to promote communal happiness. Indeed, without this, the journey thro' life becomes a weary pilgrimage; the prospect hourly darkens to the view; the mind becomes shadowed with despair, and filled with the melancholy reflection that the happiness of another becomes blighted with our own. Let no talse delicately revent you, but apply immediately.
