The Dream.

DY BARRY CORNWALL

Once I wandered with a Dream: Where'er I went, by wood or stream, On sunny days, in stormy weather, My dream and I were still together. When I was young my dream was young, And when I on my mother hung, With school-boy eyes that ran in streams, How mournful was my dream of dreams

And when, at last, I grew into a youth, and cast My cradle pleasures half aside, And rose from tears to blushing pride, Ever did my dream and I Ever did iny dream and I
Together like to lovers wander,
And sametimes sigh and sometimes ponder,
Graver than in infancy:
My dream, men told me, never true!
Yet,—so it was, we grew and grew,
Each loving now a sterner theme,
More subtle thoughts, more bold opinions,
Whilst higher in the heavenly blue,
On after, none ambitting pinions. On airer, more ambitious pinions, Would rise-and rise-my dream!

Would rise—and rise—my dream!

My dream, they said, was never true!
And yet I dreamed of Truth—of things,
Of hau: ts wherein the angel sings
For ever to Almighty cars.
Beyond the clouds,—beyond the thunder,
Beyond the planets over head,
Impetuous, daring, wild with wonder,
My dream and I together fled:—
Fled, but soon return'd to earth
Our gentle home, our place of birth,
Where still the unlearned poet dreams,
Of humble wrongs and household themes.
Not starry-crowned, nor hid in steel,
Not wandering on infernal shore,
His simple Muse, content to feel
What is and what, asks nothing more When her voice doth echo truly,-Nothing save to touch us duly With the sadness of her story

And men say that thou art vain?— Child of folly?—sinful Pain?— No: they err, who thus arraign, No:—the God who giveth reason, Armed for a severe theme, In our sunny scaring season, Bids us then drink in the sound Of the wild winds whispering round,-Bids us read the rose's leaf Bids us read the rose's leaf For its moral, sweet and briet,— Bids us listen, as we walk By the murmuring of the sea To the soft, sweet muse's talk Of all that was and is to be. Time 1—ay, true as are the flowers, True as spring or winter rain, True as are the safety hours Are the children of the brain, Heed not from what cell unknown The wild imagination springs.

This is all her glory!

Select Tale.

ADAM AND EVE.

BY J. K. PAULDING

The tollowing apologue is one of the most beau. tiful things we ever saw from the pen of our distinguished and accomplished countryman. We earnestly recommend it to the perusal of the refined and delicate reader:

When, by the just wrath of offended heaven, our first parents were driven from the beautiful garden of Eden, they wandered in guilt and shame from the seat of their innnocence and happiness. Eve lingered behind afraid to look her companion in the face, and Adam cast on her a glance of mingled tenderness and reproach from time to time. They walked wearily along and though the air was sweet and balmy, the flowers as fair, the grass as green, and the birds sung merrily as in the paradise from which they had just been expelled, the sense of their transgressions took from them all heart to enjoy the beauties of nature. They remembered their disobedience and wept.

Thus sprinkling the grass and flowers with their tears, they came at length to a little murmuring grown rocks, shaded by a whispering grove, among whose branches the birds were rearing their little clamorous brood, whose chirpings were ever and anon heard over their heads.

"I am tired," said Eve, and they sat down by place to sunken eyes, disneveried nair, and a coor-contracted with the furrows of a guilty conscience. "Thou art sadly changed, my love," said Adam, and pity gave place to resentment at the curse she had brought upon his head. He took her in his arms, kissed her cheek, and laid her in his bosom. arms, kissed her cheek, and laid her in his bosom.

Eve looked up in his face, and though the tangled locks that hung over her eyes, the tears that streamed from them, observed the changes a few hours of guilt and misery had planted on his open

Wilt thou ever forgive me, Adam?' said she, in a voice tremulous with emotion. "I have lost e a paracise.

But thou hast given me another in thy dear arms," cried Adam, while he pressed her closer to their parent.

"Shall we ever enjoy the delights of providing for a little brood like this?" said Eve, looking up in his face tenderly.

"Why should we not, my love?" he replied. "Then-even then we shall yet be happy!-Love shall make us amends for the loss of paradise, and the anger of the angel of the flaming sword; and the virtues of our children shall atone for the transgressions of the parent. We shall yet be happy; look not so pale and sad, my beloved? See how bright the great light shines yonder in the blue world! hark how the young birds twitter, and the old ones sing to them! So will it be with us. the sin ones and chase away the flies, and sing them to sleep, while thou shalt go and bring them food. Cheer up, and once more bleьв me. Adam was for a moment beguiled of his sorrows, and the recollection of his guilt was lost in the delights of love. But as they sat deceiving themselves with the hope that worldly pleasure can supply the absence of innocence, or overpower, a single moment, the stingings of con scious guilt, on a sudden, the serpent that had beguiled Eve, crawled quietly from some unseen haunt where he had hid himself and listened. His scales of a thousand changeable lustres, glowed and glittered as he wound himself gracefully along, and there was a fascination in his eye that riveted whoever looked upon it. Eve shrunk from his approach; she could not help admiring the beautiful seducer. But Adam turned trom him each beautiful seducer.

I seducer. But Adam turned from him and bade him begone.
"Why shall I begone?" he answered in a voice of ineffable sweetness. "What have I done to thee, that thou shouldst drive me away?"

"Thou hast lost us our happy home, and called down upon our heads the anger of heaven," said Adam, and he was about to stamp on the serpent with his foot, but Eve interposed, exclaiming,
"Forbear, my beloved! Didst thou not just now say, that for the paradise thou hast lost thy poor handmaid had given to thee another quite as fair! Remember, too, the cheerful birds and their tender Remember, too, the cheerful birds and their tender oung. We have opened new sources of happiness or which we are indebted to the serpent thou

The eyes of the tempter glistened with trium-hant exultation, and became a thousand times wighter than before; while his scaly armour thriled with innumerable and ever changing dyes. "There are yet other gratifications in store for thee, thou happy mother of mankind," said the beguiler. "Behold! look to the left, yonder where beginier. Definition to the left, yould where the plain stretches towards the setting sun."

They loooked and saw two lovely youths at-tempting to light the fires of two rustic altars, erected a little distance from each other. The one succeeded, the other tailed and seemed to address him in anger. Presently he raised a great club in his hand and dashed out his brains. Eve turned away her head in horror; but that curiosity which had lost her paradise, prompted her to look again, and she saw a man and woman of middle age, standing over the dead body; the one in speechless grief, the other shrieking and tearing her hair.—
At a distance she beheld the murderer fleeing away, but ever and anon looked back as it fearful of be ing pursued. On his forehead she observed as he red hot iron had imbedded itself there!

Who are those?" cried Adam. The serpent answered in his usual sweet tones:
"The two youths are brothers; the man thou seest bending in silence over the dead body, and the woman shricking and tearing her hair, are the parents of both. These two young fools quarrelled about worshipping their maker. It is thus he re-wards his votaries; one by an early death, the oth-er by a life of guilt and remorse."

"Alas!' murmured Eve, "what a wretched family! Canst thou tell me their names?"

"Thou shalt know hereafter when thou hust seen arther. Behold!"

The first pair cast their eyes apprehensively towards the plain, and saw a poor wretch fastened to a stake, with a quantity of light wood piled around him. The pile was surrounded by airmed men of furious aspect; and a little beyond stood a person in a white surplice, with a great book in his hand, apparently praying with fervency. At his feet were a woman, and eight or ten little children, kissing the robe and embracing his knees, while they seemed half dead with suffering. Pres ently the man in the white surplice shut his book a firebrand was applied to the pile of wood, and the poor wretch was slowly consumed; while his soul triumphed even in the agonies of death, as he sang ballelujahs to the living God. The man in the white surplice then gave out a hymn, and the soldiers beat the poor woman and children away for interrupting the music with their groans. "Dreadful! dreadful!" exclaimed Eve, "what does all this mean?" "It is nothing but a tavorite mode of worship-ping their Maker," replied the serpent.

"And who, and what is this wretched race of beings "'

" Thou shalt know too soon." Thus, one at a time, he exhibited to their view succession of scenes, portraying the worst effects if the vices of mankind. The wild excesses of guilty love; the barbarities of unfeeling bigotry; the cold malignity of unbelief; the iron inflexibility of avarice; the obliquities of envy; the madness of jealousy; the bloody triumphs of ambition; and the reckless outpourings of revenge, were exemplified in scenes of the most extreme violence and atrocity, and without the relief of a single ac

The innocent pair-for they were still innocent of all transgress all transgressions, save one—shuddered and turn-away, and gazed and shut their eyes alternately at this appalling succession of unmitigated horrors "Father of mercies!" at length cried Eve, "who and what are this wretched race of robbers, tyrants and murderers?"

" Thy children!" hissed the serpent, " from whose birth thou are vainly anticipating happiness. They are paying the penalties of thy transgression they are thy victims. The murdered youth are thy sons, and the wretched parents thou and thy guilty partner; the scenes thou hast just witnessed are such as will every day and every hour of all future times pollute the surface of this beautifu earth—and all for thy sake—yes, thine, wietched Eve! and yet thou hast been flattering thyself and thy partner in guilt that it is given to mortals to be happy, under the anger of their Creator! Go fools and enjoy yourselves in the bliss of multiplyng misery, guilt and despair."

The serpent crawled away, hissing in scorn, while Eve threw herself fainting on the bosom of ner beloved, exclaiming in agonies of remorse.

Indians' Idea of "Bustles." One of our California exchanges contains some nteresting anecdotes of the North-western Indians, rom among which we select the following: It appears that the Indians, as is their custom, and held an annual pow-wow at the mouth of the columbia river, on the occasion of the pring of salmon fisheries, and during its continu of the ladies and gentlemen of Astoria, Portland, and other towns, visited their encampment to witness the ceremonies. The old warriors were much interested with the young white "squaws," and were at a loss to know why their dresses did not fit them like their own squaws. By some means they be came possessed of the secret. Shortly after, the dance broke up, and they all started for their re-spective homes. On arriving at home, all those spective homes. On arriving at home, all those who were unable to go to the feast, gathered round to hear the news. 'Among other matters, the sub-ject of "bustles" came up, and first it was to be shown how they were worn, and then to be explained what was their use. The scene is thus de scribed by an eye witness:

"Imagine an immense lodge, in which were seated in a circle the whole of the tribe-the utmosgravity is on each face, and only one is allowed to speak at a time. The women are never allowed to speak at all. At length a squaw rose up, and taking a bag of feathers, tied it round her waist with a string. She then walked up and down the lodge to show how the white women walked. She

"Another arose and gave as his opinion that it was to catch the perspiration, for when it meets the string, it runs round into the bag, and when it is full they empty it. Another grunt.

"At last the old doctor—the medicine man—from whose decision there is no appeal, gave the signal for silence, and then said, that the white woman did not have so good forms as the Indian women, and that the white men were fond of good forms, and the white women wore these bass to forms, and the white women were these bags to fhake the white men think they were well formed

He then sat down amid repeated grunts." Trees, Shrubs, Evergreens, Grape Vines, Roses, Greenhouse Plants, &c., &c. UTABE VIRES, KORES, GREENHOUSE Plants, &c., &c.
