The Music Grinders.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. There are three ways in which to take

One's money from his purse,
And very hard it is to toll
Which of the three is worse;
But all of them are bad enough
To make a body curse.

You're riding out some pleasant day, And counting up your gains;
A tellow jumps from out a bush
And takes your horse's reins,
Another hints some words about

It's hard to meet such pressing friends

In such a lonely spot;
It's very hard to lose your cash,
But harder to be shot; And so you take your wallet out, Though you would rather not.

Perheps you're going out to dine— Some filthy creature begs You'll hear about the cannon ball That carried off his pegs, And ways it is a dreadful thing For men to lose their legs.

He tells you of his starving wife,
His children to be fed,
Poor little lovely innocents,
All clamorous for bread—
And so you kindly help to put
A bachelor to bed.

You're sitting on your window-seat, oudless moon; You hear a sound, that seems to wear The semblance of a tune

As if a broken fife should strive To drown a cracked bassoon And nearer, nearer still, the tide Of music seems to come, There's something like a human voice,

And something like a drum; You sit in speechless agony, Until your ear is dumb.

Poor "Home, sweet home" should seem to be A very dismal place; Your "Auld acquaintance" all at once Is altered in the face.

Their discords sting through Burns and Moore Like hedgehogs dressed in lace.

You think they are crusaders, sent-From some infernal clime, To pluck the eyes of Sentiment, And dock the tail of Rhyme,

To crack the voice of Melody, And break the legs of Time. But hark! the air again is still,

The music all is ground,
And silence, like a poultice, come
To heal the blows of sound; It cannot be—it is—it is— A hat is going round!

No! Pay the dentist when he leaves A fracture in your jaw, And pay the owner of the bear That stunned you with his paw,

Or buy the lobster, that has had Your knuckles in his claw. But, if you are a portly man,
Put on your fiercest frown,
And talk about a constable

To turn them out of town; Then close your sentence with an oath,
And shut the window down!

And if you are a slender man, Not big enough for that, Or, if you cannot make speech, Because you are a flat,

The Emigrant.

BY MRS. V. G. RAMSAY. "The stranger's heart-oh, wound it not. A yearning anguish is its lot.

The love of home and country is always strong, but nowhere is it stronger than in the warm heart which beats beneath the coarse gray frock of the Irish peasant. He loves the green land of his birth, cursed as it is with beggary and starvation; and stern is the necessity which drives him forth to seek a home among strangers. I never look upon one of these poor, despised, degraded sons of Erin but my heart warms towards him, and I think of one whose sad and early fate deserves a brief me-James Moreen was born in the north of Ireland, in one of those miserable districts where hunger and nakedness seem the only inheritance of the childrenof the soil—where the clergy and the landlord step in to divide what should be the reward of honest industry, and those who have earned their bread with the sweat of their brows are left to perish for want. The home of his childhood was hovel-a miserable hovel without a floor-the frail protection against the winter winds and summers rains; and yet, with all its squalled poverty, he loved it, for love was there—a blessing often-times denied the palace. His mother had been fair in girlhood—very fair—and though the bloom had forsaken her cheek before James could remem-ber her, there was still a melting tenderness in her soft, blue eye, and a loving smile on her lip, which seemed to illumine the naked, dripping walls, when the wintry storms beat in upon them: And there were days of summer sunshine—blessings indeed or-when the wreathing vine, with a rich canopy of leaves and flowers hid the rich exterior of the cottage, and the wild flowers grew about things which the rich and proud cannot monopo-lize. The greatest blessings which God confers on man, he has made universal and unalienable. Such was the home in which James Moreen grew up to manhood. Though fortune had been niggardly, nature was prodigal in her gifts to him, and many a purse proud aristocrat would have gladly exchanged his gold for the manly form and —it will give you a little st handsome face of the poor peasant. But this fair exterior was not his highest endowment. He possessed not only the lively and irrepressible wit, which characterizes his nation, but a noble, generous heart. The curse of drunkenness and sensuality was all around, but fell not on him. The sweet influence of his mother's smile kept him form dear. influence of his mother's smile kept him from deg-

Mary O'Brien was a neighbor's daugnter. They had grown up together, and as they met day after day, it was not strange that a mutual affection sprang up between them; and when Mary's father and mother died, leaving her homeless and friendless, he offered 'her all he possessed—an honest heart, a strong hand, and a home under the poor roof which sheltered him. Hitherto James had home the lat with seeming indifference. He had borne his lot with seeming indifference. He had labored hard all day, and returned at night to a supper of oat-meal gruel, and a couch of straw without a murmur. But since his marriage, a change had come over him. A restless desire to hatter his cardition had taken recreated services. better his condition had taken possession of him.

He had heard of America, that blessed land, where the hand of industry could earn bread enough and to spare. One thought, one purpose occupied him —how he should get there. He revolved it day and night. At evening, when his work was done, he would turn away from the scanty and tasteles meal which rewarded his toil, with ill concealed impatience, and sit with a clouded brow, gazing on the tottering walls, and reeking mouldering thatch which sheltered him.

"What ails ye, James?" his mother would sometimes say. "Come, cheer up, darling, don't be so sober like. God knows we have trouble enough sober like. God knows we have those chosen—don't bring a gloomy face to add to it."

"God knows we have too much sorrow and want," he would reply. "He never made his children who till the soil to starve. Why should you, mother, and Mary, who deserve a palace, dwell under such a roof as this? God help me to find the party of the starve.

"Hush, mother dear, and don't be discouraging a poor boy with your tears! Pray God to open the way before me, and He who guides the little birds over the wide waters, will be mindful of us in time of need." While James Moreen was vainly devising plans to accomplish the dearest purpose, a gentleman came into the neighborhood, and took lodging at the little inn. He was born near there, and though he had no relatives living in the place, a recollection of his early days had brought him back to visit the scenes of childhood. He took long walks, conversing freely with the people at their workconversing freely with the people at their work.—

The superior manliness and intelligence of young Moreen soon attracted his attention, and interested his heart. When he learned from the young man his wish to emigrate to America, he offered him a passage in a ship of which he was master, which would sail in a few days from Dublin to New

This was good fortune beyond his utmost hopes, and he hastily prepared for his departure. His family must be left behind, not even Mary could go; but then they soon expected to meet again in that land of freedom and plenty beyond the sea.—
How sweet was the hope—how bright the imaginings of that re-union! But alas, how false!— A terrible future was before them, of which they

The morning of separation came, and with many tears, and prayers, and blessings, the young man took his tarewell of his humble home, and the dear ones—dearer than lite—who were to remain be-

"God keep you, darling, on the wide waters," subbed his mother; " and bless you in the land to which you go."

And his father exclaimed, the tears streaming down his furrowed and weather beaten face. "God bless and keep you in the hollow of His holy hand, and if we see your face no more-as my heart forbodes we never may—He will give you an entrance to his blessed home above!"

The young wife clung weeping and sobbing to his bosom, till the moment of parting came, and when he turned to depart, she sunk, fainting, in his mother's arms.

With a hurried step and streaming eyes, James Moreen turned his feet into the high, road which led to Dublin. He soon gained a little eminence, from which he could obtain a last look at the poor bovel which held all that was dear to him on earth. He paused, and looking back, threw himself on his knees, and raising his hands towards heaven, exclaimed:

"O thou, who clothest the lillies of the field, and hearest the young ravens when they cry-protect them-and guide me on my way?" He arose, strengthened by this simple act of devotion, and proceeded on his way. The spring was just opening. Here and there a daisy peeped from the sod, and the birds sang in the leafless trees. Who could have forseen that ere those spring flowers should bloom again, tamine and pestilence would sweep over that devoted land, leaving many a hamlet des-olate and many a grave yard full. We will pass briefly over the voyage. That ship, the sea, everything were new and strange to the young man; but he contrived to make himself so useful and agreeable about the vessel that when he landed in New York, the kind hearted captain gave him eight dollars, and obtained for him a situation as a porter in a store.

It was a happy day for him when he received his first month's wages—twelve dollars besides, his board. He had never possessed so much money before, and he looked on it with a feeling of triumph which those who are accustomed to abundance can which those who are accustomed to abundance can never feel. A letter was dispatched to his father, informing him of his good fortune, and promising in a few months to send him money enough to bring them all over the water and then the happy home that they would have! They would not stay in the city, but hasten to the western wildernessbuild a log cabin—clear a field, and live like a prince on their own domain.

Weeks and months passed away. The summe and the autumn were gone, and the terrible winter of 1847 commenced. Then the tidings came over the sea—falling like a death knell on the ears of James Moreen—that Ireland was starving. Not n hour was lost. Every cent of his well saved earnings was dispatched to the relief of his family, for he knew that nowhere would the public calamty fall more heavily than on his native district. The terrible winter of 1847—long will Ireland emember it, and shudder at the recollection of its voes. The traveller who passes through the land s pointed to the deserted hovels, and told the fear-ul story of starvation and death which has left ful story of starvation and death which has left them desolate. Among those tenantless dwellings may be seen the humble roof which sheltered the childhood of James Moreen. After James left, the family labored on as usual, hoping at least, after rent and tithes were paid to have a few potater rent and tithes were paid to have a few potates for winter. But what were their feelings, as when he declared that "the United States when he declared that "the United States" dependent for life itself, changing to a black and offensive mass! Rapidly they disappeared, and before the winter had fairly set in, their little store was all gone. Now their only hope was on James. They had written to him of their distress, and if they could hold out till the assistance, which they felt sure he would send them, should arrive, they might hope to get through the winter. Now every particle of food was economized, and the grains of corn counted out. They grew paler, weaker, and more emaciate, and the scanty pittance which now sustained life must fail. As day after day passed the door, sweet and beautiful as if planted in a away, the forlorn hope of help died in their bo-palace garden. Thank Heaven! there are some things which the rich and proud cannot monopothe Catholic priest who resided in the place was little better off than themselves. He had promised them, however, to send every day to the post-office for the expected letter, but morning and evening came and passed to the famishing family, and it

The last spoonful of oat-meal was made into gruel, and placed on the little table. The poor mother, already wasted to a skeleton, was lying on the couch of straw, her face wrapped in the rag-ged coverlet. A thin hand removed the coverlet, and held a cup to her mouth. With a strong ef-fort, she pressed her parched lips close together,

"Thomas," said she, " take my part of the gruel —it will give you a little strength—and go to his Reverence; who knows but that letter may have boy before we die."

Mary, who had been moving about the room like a shadow, at the mention of her husband, threw herself on the bed beside her mother and sobbed aloud. The bitterest drop in the bitter cup she was drinking, was to die without a farewell from the loved one so far away.

"I will go," said the old man, rising. "The holy Virgin grant it may have come!"! He tottered a few steps towards the door and fell fainting and exhausted. He never rose again.!

Two days after the scene we have been 'descri-Two days after the scene we have been describing, a little pale-faced man, in the peculiar garb of the Catholic clergy, might have been seen walking quickly towards the cabin. Everything was still as death around, and his heart misgave him that all was not well. He raised the latch and pushed open the door, and there before him lay the whole family, still and cold in death. He stood for a moment herpostruck at the scene, and then, raising ment, horror-struck at the scene, and then, raising his hands towards heaven, he exclaimed "Hol his hands towards nearly, he extended a constant of Mother, help us! Surely the Lord will not utterly forsake his people!"

If had brought the expected letter, which he had just received. Alas! it came too late. The kind-hearted priest turned away with tears from the scene of death, and returning home he wrote the scene of death, and returning home he wrote. an account of the sad fate of the family, and en-closing the letter which he had received, sent it to James Moreen.

The winter passed heavily away to poor James. The winter passed heavily away to pool saints. Every day brought sad tidings of the woes of his country; and he trembled at the thought that his family might be involved in the general calamity. At last the fatal letter came. It was handed to him in the store, and with a heart whose throbbings night have been almost heard, he entered the count ing room, and requested one of the clerks to read it. The young man broke the seal, and glanced ver the terrible contents. He looked up, and Mo reen stood before him, pale and trembling. He had watched the expression of his face, and knew that here were evil tidings.

"Read it—read it!" he exclaimed, with a husky voice. "Let me know it all."

He read with a trembling voice, and poor James leaned against the desk for support. Every feature was convulsed with agony, and his breath came at long and irregular intervals; but when the terrible certainty came over him that they were dead—all dead, had died of starvation, he uttered a shriek, and fell fainting on the floor. He was removed to his lodgings, and for many days raved in wild delirium. Reason at length returned, but his heart was proken. Hope was dead within him. He lingered on a few weeks, and sunk quietly into the grave.— A few whom his virtues had won, or his sad and early fate moved to smpathy, laid him down, not without a tear, in his long resting place. But the memory of this worth and his woes has almost passed from the minds of men, and the grass grown green on the mound where his true heart sleeps in peace—yes, sleeps in peace, though no kindred dust lies near; and the foot of the stranger treads lightly o'er his bed, yet he sleeps in peace in his nameless grave.

"Down to the pillow of the grave, There come no haunting dreams of woe."

The Maine Liquor Law-As there is a great deal of talk at the present time about this enactment, we give it a place in our columns. Its provisions are as follows: 1. No person shall manufacture or sell any pirituous or intoxicating liquors, except one suit able person in each town, appointed by the proper officers to sell for medical or mechanical purposes, and who shall receive such compensation as the board may prescribe; conform to such rules and regulations as may be laid down for the sale of iquors, and give bond, with security, that he wil sell the same for no other than the specified pur-

LETTER FROM GOV. KOSSUTH TO SENATOR KING.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—A letter from Kossuth to Senator King, dated Cincinnati, Feb. 14, 1852, was presented to the Senate this morning. It simply states that agreeably to the suggestion of the Secretary of State, he transmits to the two Houses of Congress a copy of his farewell letter to the President addressed to him on leaving Washington. In this letter he expresses, through the President, his gratitude to the Government and peo-ple of the United States, for the distinguished honor gress, when he declared that "the United States could not remain indifferent when the strong arm of foreign power is invoked to stifle public sentiment." This magnanimous declaration (says Kossuth in his letter) followed by such generous manfestations, will be recorded in history as a protestation on baball of the everlasting principles of the tation on behalf of the everlasting principles of the law of nations against their infraction by violence, and the millions of my people will receive with hope and confidence, when they shall come to know what favors were bestowed upon their exiled chief by the great Republic of the West, in acknowledgent of the justice of Hungary's cause. Kossuth in this letter emphatically disavows any Kossuth in this letter emphatically disavows any desire that the United States should jeopardize their own welfare and prosperity for the sake of the oppressed nations of Europe. Yet in view of their present gloomy condition, he hopes that the United States will be induced to pronounce in favor of the law of nations, and the undisturbed safety of commercial intercourse.

He concludes his letter with allusions to the in expressible joy with which humanity would hail such a pronunciamento from such a place. The Providence Mirror announces the mar

Mentally.—The fearful effects on the mind are much to be dreaded: Loss of Memory, Confusion of Ideas, Depression of Spirits; Evil of Forebogding, Aversion of Society, Self Distrust, Love of Solitude, Timidity, &c., are some of the evils produced.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Weakness of the system, Nervous Debility and premature decay generally arises from the destructive habit of youth, that solitary practice so fatal to the healthful existence of man, and it is the young who are the most apt to become its Victims from an ignorance of the dangers to which they subject themselves. Parents and Guardians are often misted with respect to the cause or source of disease in their sons and wards. Alas! how often do they ascribe to other causes the wasting of the frame, Palpitation of the Heart, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Derangement of the Nervous System, Cough and Symptoms of Cousumption, also those scrious Mental effects, such as loss of Memory, Depression of Spirits or peculiar fits of Melancholy, when the truth is they have been caused by indulging Pernicious but alluring practices, destructive to NERVOUS DEBILITY.
