Beautiful Sketch.

I have worshipped blue eys, and there is no ra-diance so heavenly as that which gleams from them. But black are more bewildering; and when a shadow of melancholy falls over the forehead, it softens their beauty, while it does not dim them.

If you will go with me now to a glen in the Highlands and a willow shaded nook, I will point out to you the very spot where, years ago, there stood a rude bench, on which many times I have seen the fair girl I write of sitting, and by which I once saw her kneeling. The cottage under the hill is occupied by strangers, and its broad hall and large rooms now ring to the laughter of those that know not her whose gentle spirit haunts their very

She was beautiful as a dream. Never was a holier torehead shaded by raven tresses; never were tresses so glorious as those. If I tell you that I ---, you will call me an enthusiast, and ascride my admiration to my passion.

I did love her, but only as a boy worships a being very far above him. I used to lie at her feet on the grass, and gaze into her fece, and watch the play of her exquisite features. It was there I learned first how high, and pure, and worshipful humanity

She was young and beautiful. What need to fection, and die for lack of it! Her father devoted his fortune and his life to her and she was heiress numberless suitors of every rank and variety. I cannot now remember all of them, although I kept the run of them tolerably well. But of all, there were only two that appeared to have any prospect of success; and the village gossips were occupied in discussing their relative chances.

Frank R— was the gayest, best hearted fellow in the world, and hid you seen him on his front of the large white house on the hill, as they rode by, and had you there watched the compressed lip, the broad, calm forehead, the pale face, and the speaking of Joseph S--- as he saw them passing. you would have prayed to God that that fair g night belong to that noble man, even as I, a boy then prayed.

God has answered my prayers. When the long way was travelled over, and the rugged and diffi-cult steep surmounted—when her fairy foot was pressing on the rock at the summit of the hill of lite, and her eyes gazed into the deep blue sky, with a longing gaze, there, even there, beyond the blue, his outstretched arms received her, and his embrace was heaven!

that love is of the clay! Go preach to the dead, ye who deny the immorality of the affections. Go reason with trees, or images of wood, or with your own motionless, liteless, icy souls, ye who believe that, because there is no marrying yonder, there shall be no embracing, or because, we may not use the gentle words "my wife," we may not clasp these sanctified forms into our own holy arms! tell you, man, that immortality would be a glorious cheat, if, with our clay, died all all our first affections. I tell you, that annibilation would be heaven, if I believed that when my head at length silence and repose of death, these loving eyes will never look into mine again, this pure clasp never be around my neck, this holy caress never bless me

Fut see how I hasten in advance of my story.-And yet, like Canning's knife-grinder, I remember now that I have no story to tell,—or at best it is a simple story.

She loved Joe. His calm and earnest way o much in her company, nor of her; but when the were alone, or only some of the children near, his low voice would be musical, and she sat entranced with his eloquence. I have seen them seated on a bench by the side of a stream, and have heard him lead her gentle soul, step by step, with him from earth to stars, and then from star to star, until she seemed to be in heaven with him, and listening to

It was herefore, with great pain that his daughter obser ved his coldness and rudeness to Joseph S. was not surprised however much she was grieved when an open rupture rendered the suspension of his visits at the house absolutely necessary. They had never spoken of love. Each knew the secret of the other's affection, and what need of words to tell it! It would have been but a repetition of hacknied phrases. And yet there is no music in the world so sweet as those three word "I love you," from the lips we love to kiss. But the father of our gentle friend had feared the existence of some bond between them, and per-empto-rily required his daughter to break it, if it did exist. replied to him, relating the simple truth, and he desired her to refuse thenceforward to see or

The air was clear, the sky serene, and no sound disturbed; but the solt voice of the wind, among the tree tops made a pleasant music, and The stillness wa we listened and were silent.

You will pardon me if I pass over that scene. I dare not attempt a description of it. It was my first lesson in human suffering, and though I have learned it over and over since then, though the iron has entered my soul, and seared and scarred it, yet I have never seen, and I do not believe I have ever felt, more agony than those two felt, as they parted that night to meet no more on earth.

"I will live and die in this memory. She lifted her face to his, and her arms to his neck, and they clung together in a long and passionate embrace. Their lips did not separate, but were pressed close together, until he felt her form cold, and her clasp relaxed, and he laid her gently down on the old seat, bowed over her a moment in prayer, and was gone. I heard him say, "take care of her W——," and so I strove to recal the life that had left her lips, and cheeks, and eyes. It came slowly, and she awoke as we wake in the morning after death has entered our charmed circle, with an oppression on the brain, and a swimming, swollen, senselessness of soul. At length she remembered all, and raised herself with a half articulated exclamation of agony, broken by a sob; and then fell on her knees by the bench, and buried her face in her hands, and re

Three years fled with their usual swiftness. To Sarah D—, they were very slow and painful years, yet she was happy in her quiet way, and no one dreamed of the strange tryst she was longing to keep on the other side of the dark river which most shrink from. She grew feeble daily, as the summer advanced, and in December she was evidently dying.

One day her mother had been out of the house perhaps making calls; she returned at evening, and mong other incidents of news which she had earned, she mentioned to Sarah the death of her old friend, Joseph S----.

There was no startling emotion visible. s her mother mentioned the fact, which to her was the most solemn yet most joyful news the world could give; for now, how much nearer was their meeting! I saw a smile flash across her face, as the joyful news reached her ear. I saw her forehead raised to receive the caress which I knew she felt. She was silent for many minutes, and then spoke in feeble, yet very musical accents, and I boyishly wept aloud. Then she smiled and look-ed at me with finger upraised, and said: "Wait a little while longer, dear W——

Poor Kate.

A young female of the name of Kate Virgini Poole is now confined for life in the State Prison of New Hampshire, on the charge of infanticide. Sh is a native of Scotland, and has no relative but on in this country. Her case is a sad one, and mor deserving of pity than of the law's stern penalty if the following statement from the New Hampshir

"Her downfall was effected under circumstance of atrocity that cry most loudly for vengeance or its guilty author. Her arms, neck, and person are scarred with wounds received in defending her self from her diabolical aggressor, and her ruin was only accomplished when she was drugged to nsensibility! With the innocent evidence of her all in her arms, she was excluded from the house of he only relative she had in America, and, bearing city, shelter for herself and babe, while she coul with the labor of her hands find honorable suppor This was anything but the course which have been pursued by one conscious of guilt! a city of strangers—a mother, but not a wife—what could be expected? All doors were closed against her. She could not give away her child, but a mother's heart revolted against it. Product of ough it was, and born to infamy though i might be, she clung to it as all that was dear to he bound to life by the ties which bound her as nother-she would, under other circumstance in her extremity. Finding every avenue to employ ment closed to her in one city, she fled to another It was night when she left. Heart-broken—only have sought the welcome refuge of suicide. With cise by the loneliness and misery of her situation—looking at the babe that slumbered on her breast with the brand of infamy born on its brow—is it a wonder that a mind thus tortured was swept beyon he bounds of consciousness?

In this condition of mind, while travelling alone of the cars. On being subsequently questioned about he affair, she answered:

the affair, she answered:

'I do not recollect anything distinctly after I entered the cars. The lights, the crowd, and the motion of the cars, seemed to confuse me. I do no think I should have remembered anything, it the weight of the child, which slumbered on my lap, had not reminded me of its existence and my own situation. At last a cloud seemed to thicken abou me, and everything seemed to look white that me my eyes. The child itself seemed like a feather and appeared to float away from me unconsciously It did not seem to fall, but to rise, and I thought could see it for some moments afterwards!

On being asked the question, 'Do you think you you had for your child the ordinary feelings and natural love of a mother?' She looked her interogator fulll in his face, with eyes gushing with tears at the question, said, 'Sir, I would gladly have y own life for it! I could have given e in the full consciousness of my condition, but I resolved to work myself int the grave before my child should have been sepa-rated from me. Do you think, sir, I would part with that without which life would have been un intolerable burden?' Then she added, with deen emotion—Thank Heaven, it was asleep the last I remember of it, and I think it never awoke to upbraid me with a single cry! To our mind, there never was a clearer case mental hallucination, at the time the alleged crime of infanticide was committed, than this, and yet the ninisters of the law have doomed the unfor Kate to a felon's cell, while her despoiler-the di abolical author of all her wrongs and misfortunes. s suffered to go 'unwhipt of justice!' Her convic tion, under such circumstances, is a libel upon the State which sanctions such perversion of justice as a blot upon humanity. NERYOUS DEBILITY.

Weakness of the system, Nervous Debility and premature decay generally arises from the destructive habit of youth, that solitary practice so fatal to the healthful existence of man, and it is the young who are the most ap to become its Victims from an ignorance of the dangers to which they subject themselves. Parents and Guardians are often misted with respect to the cause or source of disease in their sons and wards. Alas! how often do they ascribe to other causes the wasting of the frame, Palpitation of the Hea.
