The Wife for Me.

Horace Hastings was a sober, sensible, enterpri-sing bachelor, of some eight and twenty years, who having obtained an excellent reputation by his industry and integrity, and having made himself useful to the mercantile firm in Boston, with whom he had served an apprenticeship, was at length inne had serveu an apprenticeship, was at length in-vited to a partnership in the concern. For some time he had been encouraged to anticipate this ele-vation, and he soberly and energetically entered upon the new duties of his position. When busi-ness crowded, he had but little leisure to mourn over his condition, but when the hurrying season was over, and hours each day hung heavy on his hands, he could not help thinking how delightful it would be, had he but a horse and a gentle wife of his own. His pecuniary circumstances now warranted such luxuries, and he resolved to marry, when he could find a lady "just suited to his

At the appointed time he reached the residence of his old friend, and found that the family were prepared and pleased to welcome him as a guest.—
In the parlor were two young ladies well dressed and quite handsome. He was duly introduced to Misses Jane and Charlotte, and found them accomplished and sensible young ladies. He found her sprightly, cheerful, as accomplished, and he thought a little more graceful, than Jane, who was the elder, or Charlotte, who was younger than herself. He known that her to be a hired girl in the family, but not a whit more meanly of her, for having revealed whit more meanly of her, for having revealed the self-elder of the way to the house of Mr. P. Wr. P., came in a little before dark, and said horses and cows and crops, as though he knew something about them as well as about broadcloths and calicoes. At dinner time Jane and Charlotte were in the parlor waiting for him, and Sarah as usual, was bustling about the kitchen. "I do wish, said he sotto voce, "that one of those girls would take Sarah's place in the kitchen a little while, that I might find out some of some of their housekeeping qualities, and that I might have a chat with her."

But he waited for such a change in vain, though he found some opportunities of converse, and dis-covered all he wished to know just then about her mental qualifications and acquirements, and at the close of the fourth day, just as he got into bed, he slapped the white counterpane emphatically, and said to it, as there was nobody in the room, I supose he must have spoken to the counterpane or

The next day was the outer limit of his visit, and as he stood at the window after breakfast, he saw Sarah with the witching white apron, trip into the orchard to shake down some apples—for it was baking day and pies were to be made. Horace trolled out after her, and shook the tree, and helped her to pick up the apples, and carried the basket as they returned closely, very slowly to the house. The Man with Many Daughters. BY ALLEN M. SCOTT, M. A.

It was in the autumn of '35, business called m away, from the little thriving city of L. R.—k, in which I then resided, and after equipping, myself with the necessary travelling gear, I sat alone on horseback, and pursued my journey for five consecutive days in a north-western direction, over secutive days in a north-western direction, over hill and dale, glen and glade. The country was then, (twenty years ago) the Far West; now, no place this side of that or Ortgon, can establish any claim to that application, then universally given to Arkansas and Missouri. But to proceed to my narrative: This country, twenty years ago, was sparsely settled. Human habitations along the route I was exploring were like "angels visits," that is, if the reader will consider some 15, 20, or 30 miles as being "far between." And it was altogether indispensible for the stranger to have a way bill, ndispensible for the stranger to have a way bill, and to use some degree of caution, or he might chance to meet the "dewy-eve" in a region where he could find no shelter for man or beast.

I had been much interested in the country thro continually in view. The fourth day in the evening I arrived at the foot of the Ozark mountains, or rather a spur of that chain, and being informed by the gentleman whose house stood near the asent, that it was fifteen miles across the mountain though it was not quite night tall.

When the supper was announced, I was invited to a neat little apartment, where the table was spread, on which were sundry dishes of veniso well stewed and savory; sweet potatoes baked brown; corn bread, butter, coffee, cheese milk, etc. Here I was made welcome, and most assuredly did indlord, said :

"How far, sir, to C----?" He replied that it was about forty miles

"Are you a relative of Mr. P.?" she continued. I told her that I was not. "Excuse me," said she, "for being inquisitive. I am a daughter of Mr. P.; and am expecting a cousin of mine, whom I have never seen. He resides in Virginia, and is looked for hourly. I was indulging the hope that you, perhaps, were my

I smiled, and told them I was not; but they were fully persuaded that that he had been a mile distant to visit a married daughter of his, who had just returned from Missouri, whither she had gone on a visit to a couple of sisters, who were living among the lead mines. On inquiry, Mr. P., told me that he had twelve daughters, all grown, and all living.

Speech of Gen. Frank Pierce, Upon the Reception of a Sword Presented to him by th

State of New Hampshire. In 1848 the legislature of his native State voted Gen. Pierce a splendid sword, as a token of their appreciation of his gallant services in the field and esteem for him as a man. The sword was presented in behalf of the State by the governor. In reply to the address of that functionary, Gen Pierce, after referring to the fact-that, of the six hundred and torty men who went with him to Mexico, less than one hundred and fifty lived to return, said :

I accepted this splendid weapon from the people of New Hampshire with an abiding sense of per sonal regard which has never seemed to grow cold. May I not be permitted to say, without reference to my political associations, that I receive it as one among a multitude of evidences, so far as the men of my own time of life are concerned, of something like a fraternal esteem and confidence which it has been my highest purpose to merit, and is my firmest never to lose? In the mean time, I am not unmindful of another and higher consideration which actuated the legislature. The sword, though given to me, was designed and received as a token of the estimation in which you hold the services and sacrifices of the officers and soldiers of the bri gade which it was my good fortune to command and to them I would have the grateful thoughts of my friends turned to-day—to the noble dead—to the men who with their life-blood sealed their devotion to the rights and honor of the republic—to the gallant living, who having fulfilled their mission amid the untried scenes of an eventful campaign on a foreign soil, are now unobstrusively and use-I give evidence that my attachment to these dis-pensations of providence was by no means teigned or unreal. A Whig's say so of Gen. Pierce.

The editor of the Ironton, (Ohio) Register (Whig) having from his earliest boyhood known Genera PIERCE, undertakes to tell us who he is. He says "FRANKLIN PIERCE was born about fifty years ago and while these were in a state of preparation, I asked, "How far to C.—?" The gentleman gave me the information sought for; upon which I asked him if he knew Mr. P. He of that county for many years; Governor of the State in the years 1827 and 1829, and withal a found so pleasant a home, even if it was only for a few days. And after supper was over, and the table was cleared, a third young lady, very neatly dressed, entered the room, and was formally introduced to him as one of the sisters—Miss Sarah.—

Valuable Proporty Fer Sale, THE large and commodious HOUSE formerly occupied by the subscriber in South *Queen street, opposite the Odd Fellows' Hall.—
There is an extensive range of back buildings, gas and water are introduced; and there is, in addition, two wells of excellent water on the premises and the privilege of a third on the line of this and the adjoining property. The property would be suitable for a public house, or a boarding house, or the buildings in the rear might be converted into a number of small dwelling houses, which, on account of the premises being near the Conestoga Steam Mills could be readily rented to advantage.
