A Military Administration.

The following extract from the speech of Hom tephen A. Douglass, at the Democratic meeting in Richmond, Va., is worthy of careful perusal. It is publicans: teresting and instructive, and cannot fail to inspire the mind of every candid reader with a sense of danger to the interests of the country to result from a military administration:

Why has the Whig party forgotten, with an oblivion so complete, all that it once said about military politicians? Time was when they pre-ferred "war, pestilence and lamine," to the election of a military cheiftain, referring to Gen. Jackson who did not at the time of his nomination, hold any commission in the army, who never was a soldier by profession, and who entered the army only in the hour of danger, as Pierce did, and like him, istration of Mr Van Buren, when the Florida war sheathed his sword when the war was over.— { was raging at the south, and $12,000,000 more was raging at the south, and $12,000,000 more (Great Applause.)

We have yet to see a professional soldier succeed as a statesman. Washington was no military man by profession, following the army for a living. He was a civilian in the fullest sense of the word. He was reared for civil pursuits. He held civil of-fices both before and after the revolution. He was a member of the Continental Congress that founded the Union, and a member of the convention that framed our constitution. He knew whether naturalization laws ought to be uniform or not The period during which Washington held a commission in the army, constituted, indeed, but a very few years of his long life. He was the first of our soldiers. (Cheers and applause.) Andrew [Here Mr. Douglass was interrupted by long and

Gentlemen, it does my heart good to hear Dem-ocrats applaud the name of Andrew Jackson. (Re-newed applause.) Andrew Jackson started in life as a poor attorney, was United States Attor-ney under Washington, a Senator of the United States from Tennessee, and a Judge of the United State Supreme Court of his State, before he ever drew a sword. When his country was involved in war, only, did he like Washington, leave the pur-suits of a citizen for the duties of a soldier; and like, Washington, when war was at an end he three up his commission and went to a farm. Like Wash-ington, also he left that farm again only to become the President of the United States. He was not a member of the military protession; like Wash-ington, he was never more that a citizen soldier. Of forty years public service, not more than five or six were spent in the army, and the rest in civil (Cheers.) So with Harrison. He commen-

Why is it that the South American republics do not thive? why do they have no peace? why do they live in perpetual revolution? They have adopted our laws; they have copied our constitutions; yet they do not succeed, while we do. Why do not like cluses produce like effects? Because, while between their institutions and ours there is a good narallel, in their administration of them they make a grand difference. In those republics the commanders of their armies are invariably candidates for the Presidency, while with us such has never yet been the case until the present time. In those republics, when a civilian is of one side, and the commander in chief is set up by the opposite party, the civilian is generally elected by the people; but the soldier invariably takes elected by the people; but the sold, possession of the office by the sword. Hence their civil wars, resulting in anarchy and despotism, and destroying every vestige of liberty. Now, we are importing this unhappy, this Mexi-can policy, into the United States. We are copycan policy, into the United States. We use copy-ing misfortunes—borrowing a fatal fault. This practice for setting up the commanders of the army for the highest civil office, I repeat, is an inarmy for the highest civil omce, 1 repeat, is with novation on our theory and our practice, and the history of those miserable sister States ought to set. Presently, I was sent for: "Oh! mamma, you Taylor was gathered to his fathers; Fillmore reigned in his stead-a man who previous to that time, had never furnished such proofs of superiority of states-manship as to cause him to be looked to as a canmanship as to cause firm to be looked to as a can-didate for the first office—a man of respectable tal-ents, respectable character, and of gentlemanly de-portment, who has performed no great and striking act to signalize his administration in history. Yet, regarding his official term in contrast with the military administration that preceded him, we feel--aye, all of us feel-that Fillmore was a real God end ! It was the calming of the waters when the ship was sinking in the tempest.

Kossuth and the Whigs.

The Whig State Journal, of this place, has a long article in one of its late numbers against Kos suth and his mission, denouncing him as a foreign intermeddler in our political affairs. Some Whigs in this region made great professions of friendship for Governor Kossuth, but it appears they are re-turning to their old instincts since Gen. Scott is nominated; and are to follow their leader in his crusade against all toreigners. This has always been the policy of the Whig party, and it is not to be expected that that journal would take a differ-ent course. The following from an Ohio Whig pa-per is the way foreign Germans are denounced in tast State by some of the Whig leaders, and al-though our Whigs have more decours the are though our Whigs have more decency than to express it in this way, the same feeling rankles

Now came the struggle between love and what I falsely termed duty. My heart said, give her the kiss of peace; my stern nature urged me to persist in my correction, that I might impress the fault upon her mind. That was the way I had been trained till I was a most submissive child, and I jremembered how often I had thanked my mother. since, for her straightforward course. I knelt by the bedside; "Mother can't kiss you, Ellen," I whispered, though every word choked me, her hand touched mine; it was very hot, but I attributed it to her excitement. She turned her little grieving face to the wall; I blamed myself, as the fragile form shook with half suppressed sobs, and saying "Mother hopes little Ellen will learn to mind her after this," left the room for the night.'

It might have been about twelve when I was awakened by my nurse; apprehensive, I rau eagerly to the child's chamber; I had had a fearful dream Ellen did not know me; she was sitting up, crim-soned from the forehead to the throat, her eyes so bright that I almost drew back aghast at their glances. From that night a raging fever drank up her life-and what think you was the incessant plaint poured into my anguished heart; "Oh, kiss He mother-do kiss me; I can't go to sleep." e Holy little angel! she did go to sleep one grey e moly little angel! she did go to sleep one grey morning, and she never woke again—never. Her hand was locked in mine, and all my veins grew icy with its gradually chill; faintly the light faded ont in the beautiful eves white and white out in the beautiful eyes, whiter and whiter grew the tremulous lips; she never knew me, but with her last breath she whispered. "I will be good, nother, if only you'll kiss me." Kiss her! God knows how passionate, but una vailing were my kisses upon her cheek and lip, af-ter that fatal night. God knows how wild were my prayers that she might know, if but only once that I kissed her. God knows how I would have yielded up my very life, could I have asked forgive-ness of that sweet child. Well! grief is all unavailing now. She lies in her little tomb; there is marble urn at her head, and a rose-bush at her feet there grow sweet summer flowers, there waives the gentle grass; there birds sing their matins and vesers; the blue sky smiles down to day, and there lies ried the freshness of my heart. Parents, you should have heard the pathos in the oice of that stricken mother, as she said, "There are plants that spring into greater vigor if the heavy pressure of jootstep crush them; but oh! there are others, that even the pearls of that light dew bend to the earth."—Olive Branch.

Pearl Powder.

Pearl Powder. THE object of this Cosmetic is to harmonize and soften the character of the complexion. Being an article entirely different from and much superior to ordinary powder, it requires a small quantity in its application, and yet so identifies itself with the natural appearance as to be imperceptible to the ni-cest observer. To those ladies particularly who are subject to flushes of the face or neck, to such as whether nervous or otherwise, the Pearl Powder affords harmless, effectual and most welcome relief; it is also very cool and refreshing in warm weatner.
