Written on the death of John S. Cloments, Marietta.

Whilst yet the dreams of youth were bright, And all was peace, and joy, and love, DEATH came with stealthy step, and light, And bore him to his home ab 'Tis well! he ne'er may feel or know, The cares of mortals here below

Grieve not, for ho is happy now, From all the ills of life set free By that Great Power to whom all bow, Nor dare to question His decree: That though ho moulders 'neath the sod, Ilis soul has found its way to God.

We're told that Man is made to mourn Through ills, and cares, and doubts, and fears; If then to dust we soon return, We thus are saved a world of tears; By anging type i

By ancient poets it was sung, The loved ones of the Gods die young Still, still, 'tis hard with some to part, stin, stin, 'us hard with some to part, With those who've been our joy and pride, It well nigh breaks the loving heart. Yet God's just will we must abide, For He is just, and He is wise, And all his ways are mysteries.

Some breathe their latest, deepest, sigh Where tearless eyes look coldly on, And not a feeling heart is nigh To say "alas!" for him that's gone : Who thus unknown his soul yields up, Tastes of the dregs of sorrow's cup.

But thou young friend, wast doubly blest In dying 'midst thy friends and home, Beneath that Mother's eye who prest Her brow with pain when thou didst ro On El Dorado's glittering sand, A stranger in a stranger's land.

Thou, too, wast blest in dying ere The spring-time of thy life had passed, Ere yet the canker-worm of care Its blight upon thy soul had cast, Ere thou the shades of life could scan, Or know the hollow heart of man.

'Then rest thee! though we miss thee here, We would not claim thee back again, We would not claim thee back again, Nor call thee from a happier sphere, To grace once more the hauats of men : Whilst back thy soul we would not crave, We'll moisten with our tears thy grave. MARIETTA, Sept. 24, 1852.

SHOCKING RAILROAD ACCIDENT .- Four Lives Lost .- A shocking accident occurred at Reading on Tuesday evening, about dusk. Some factory girls were standing on the track opposite the cotton factory, waiting for a down train to pass, when an engine came up on the other track and run over four, killing one instantly, and injuring the three others so much, that they all died before morning. The noise of the passing down train prevented their hearing the signals of the approaching up train, and, unfortunately, no attention was paid to the signals of the men on the down train who saw their danger.

Ohio STATE FAIR .- The late Agricultural Fair held at Cleveland last week was the largest and most successful which has ever taken place in Ohio. The receipts were larger by $6,000 than at any previous Fair. The premiums awarded were worth $4,000, nearly all of which were in silver. The entries were very numerous, though there were not many from abroad. The annual address was de-livered by Professor Marss, the editor of the New Jersey Working Farmer. He dedicated a portion of his remarks to what he deemed the two great agricultural improvements of the year, underdrain-ing and subsoil bloughing, the chief henefit to be ing and sub-soil ploughing, the chief benefit to be derived from which were security from drought.-He also remarked on the proper mode of feeding cattle, and the analyzation of the soil. His address was practical and lucid throughout, and gave great satisfaction to his hearers.
