Faded and gone are the Summer's sweet flowers

Strewn to the wintry winds o'er the dark mould!

Smiles, when sunlight stele thro' the soft hours
Down from yon azure their leaves to unfold.

Bright were their beauties when breezes swept on O'er the pure waters to gather perfume;

Whispers lovely, now faded and gone!

Slumbars lovely wind chillesses and clear to Slumbors lonely 'mid chiliness and gloom!

Oh! but the spring time will come o'er the plain

Wooing the whispering blossoms again,

With its soft tread the emerald lawn—

Then we'll not mourn for the faded and gone.

Faded and gone are the ones that we cherished,
Fondly and true, in our bosoms of yore,
Slumbering buds may awake o'er the perished,
Their faded hearts shall unfold no more.
Sweet is the music that Memory flings
O'er the basis of Life's early love,
Where flaw the angels on fluttering wings.

O'er the basis of Life's early love,
Where flew the angels on flattering wings,
Bearing our lost through the starlight above.
Oh! there's a land where the perished ones bloom
Where cometh never a shadow of gloom—
Fadeless and fair is that glorious dawn— Then we'll not mourn for the taded and gone. Faded and gone are the sweet dreams of childhood

Faded and gone are the sweet dreams of childhood, Whon the young wings of the Spirit were free, Folded and furled 'mid the shadowy wildwood— Sweeping the surface of life's sunny sea. 'Time's fading fingers hath sullied the leaf, Stainless and lovely in childhood's pure years; Pages of beauty one brilliant, yet brief, Were its deep impress of changes and tears. Oh! but the bissoms of childhood will bloom

Brightly again, o'er the shadowy Tomb Infinite gladness flows endlessly on— Then we'll not mourn for the faded and gone.

The Career of a Bigamist, BY ELOISE J. ODELL

The arrest, conviction, and imprisonment of Na. thaniel J. Bird, the heartless bigamist and swindlere which took place only a few weeks since, must b fresh in the recollection of everybody. We have fresh in the recollection of everybody. We have before us the details of his principal vilainous transactions, which, taken altogether, stamp that con-temptible wretch as one of the most depraved, and at the same time most successful reprobates that ever figured in the world's history. We have not space in which to give the full particulars of this We have not scoundrel's wicked career, and must content ourselves with detailing one of his numerous exploits after glancing hurriedly over the principal incidents of his career of crime.

To begin then-he was conceived in wickedness, being the son of an unfortunate girl who was seluced by his father in Harrisburg, Pa. At the age of fifteen, he seduced a girl about his own age, in his native town, who subsequently committed sui-cide, and he was forced to fly. He went to Reading, Pa., where he married a highly respectable girl, whom he shortly afterwards deserted, and taking up his residence at Wilmington, Del., he married and deserted a respectable young girl in that town, from whence he field to California, where he assumed the name of Dr. Hunter, and married a girl from New York; she died shortly afterwards, when he made his way to Philadelphia in 1851 where he married the daughter of a respectable widow lady; by this lady he had one child. He next deserted her and married a girl in Kensington r was reputed to be a wealthy citizen of Philadelphia; this victim he succeeded in seducing, after which he prevailed upon her to accompany him to New York, where they took board at a fashionable hotel, passing as man and wife, having grown tired of this dupe, he eventually robbed her of every thing she possessed, even to her jew-elry, and absconded, making his way to Boston.— He did not stay in that city long, but returned to N. York again, and took private rooms at a house in Eldridge street, where he attempted to seduce a married woman, but failed; he then took up with a prostitute, introduced her into a respectable boarding house as his wife, but shortly afterwards exposed, was forced with his vile companion, to leave in confusion. He then parted with his mistress and his next step was to take rooms at one of the most tashionable hotels in New York, under the name of Smith; while here he contracted the marriage which will form the principal subject of this Previous to his trip to Boston, he called at a gen teman's furnishing establishment on Broadway, and left an order, which was duly executed, for Mr. Theodore Collam—for which he called, saying he was about to leave town, but would soon return, when he would call again and replenish his wardrobe. Soon after he was snugly ensconced in his comfortable quarters at the Irving House; he called again at the fashionable establishment before mentioned, and left orders to be filled, of the most extravagant kind, desiring them speedily; he tarried a short time, entering into conversation with the proprietress, a lady of pleasing address and win-ning manners. He evidently put forth all his powers to please, and if possible to make an impression at the same time displaying what seemed an evilence of wealth and easy nonchalance and good humor, which lew men possess, and admirably suit-ing his purpose. Before he left, he tendered his heart and hand to the young widow; at the same time remarking that there was a younger and more beautiful lady on Bleecker street, whom he could marry, and who would go well nigh mad if he did not; but he preferred the widow, for his acquaint-ance with the world, and thorough knowledge of human nature, told him that she would make the best wife. She laughed at him, telling him she did not know any thing about him, he was a stranger to her, and she fancied she was his senior in years. To this last remark he responded, that it made no ifference to him if it were so.

. He departed, leaving her to consider the matter saying he would call again, and bring her proof of his position. Accordingly he called, bringing with him as evidence of his respectability, papers to show that he had monies to the amount of four thousand dollars invested in a manufacturing establishment in Nassau street, New York, and the sum of thirteen thousand dollars in his lather's hands at Charleston, South Carolina, who, he said, was the proprietor of the Red River Iron Works; people in good standing, and holding a firm posi-

The lady inquired of a legal friend who was considerably acquainted in Charleston, whether he knew such a family there, when he replied that he did, and that they were highly respectable and wealthy people. Collam urged his suit, and the lady finally betrothed herself to him. On the following day he called, and desired her to lay aside all ceremony, and consent to have their nuptials solemnized immediately—even that morning—to which she did not consent, which seemed rather to chagrin him; he called again in the afternoon and begged her to waive all ceremony, and go at once and be united; but she again refused, when he told

Daughter in law,
E. COLLAM.

Collam closed, sealed, and directed this letter to William H. Collam, and conveyed it to the office. He manifested a considerable degree of anxiety about the reply he expected to this letter, as he said to what his parents would say, or how they would receive the intelligence of his marriage; and judging from his restlessness and nervous excitability his wife supposed that if the impression produced ose, as he seemed to fear he would, that portion of his fortune held by his father. She tried to soothe him by saying that her business capabilities were of an order that was available, she feeling hersel of an order that was available, she feeling nersell adequate to the task of conducting any amount of business surely and safely; and that he might rely upon all her energies being exercised to his ultimate good. Yet the restlessness ceased not, nor and the restlessness ceased not, nor could he remain quiet for a single moment. A fev days sufficed to show his wife, the light, trifling nay utter thoughtlessness of him to whom she had entrusted the keeping of her happiness. She al ready began to fear he could throw all thought of his responsibility aside as easily as could a child a bauble; but she spoke not nor looked not her fears, determining to win him to appreciate her truly by every kindness that woman can bestow. In the midst of the suspense of waiting for the reply to his letter to his father, a warning was put in the hands of his wife in the form of a letter. It ran thus:

"Mrs. Collam is advised to inquire into the char acter of a certain man, who boarded in Eldridge street, by the name of Hunter; and also of his frequent visits to a soda saloon on Bleecker street; and of his taking a woman of bad character into a respeciable boarding house. You are warned as a friend,

When the pretended Mr. Collam came io, his wife handed him the above letter, and his confusion was apparent; he admitted the fact of passing by the name of Hunter, alleging as the reason, that a young lady followed him from Philadelphia, and he assumed the name to elude her. The other charges assumed the name to elucia her. The other charges he said were false, and his wife of course was disposed to believe him. On the following day he brought a letter purporting to be from his father. It was dated Charleston; Aug. 15, 1853, and acknowledged the receipt of the letter which Collam had written, called upon him to fetch his wife home if he was really married, but indulged in the lear that it was only a hoax, and one of the youngster's wild pranks. It was signed Your affectionate fath

The hypocritical wretch pretended to be in per fect ecstacies when the above letter was received and desired his wife to prepare for a speedy removal to the suuny South; he wished her to make he arrangements to close her business, as his father he then made the acquaintance of a young lady he said, would require his services as an over ding and unsuspecting wife consented to do as he desired, and hastened to execute all orders on hand preparatory to such a proceeding. Meanwhile Mr. Collam was not slow in making violent exhi pitions of temper to customers patronizing his wife's busines; and what was the effect of such conduct or that wife? A determined resolution to win him all such debasing faults by a steady and persever-ing kindness. No word of chiding fell from her lips, but gently she soothed and quieted the turbu lent spirit to repose.

He was now living on the proceeds of her busi ess-at times with plenty of money, at others without any.

One day he came in and said, Eloise let me wea your watch this afternoon? Hesitatingly, but not in fear, she took it from her girdle and gave it to him. He wore it a few days, when she missed it he said it was at the jewellers, he had broken it but would have it in a day or two, and the matter was dismissed.

Things apeared to go on smoothly for a few days, and nothing occurred to awaken suspicion in the breast of the too confiding wife of the bigamist until a few days prior to his intended departurewhen he came in early in the evening, in apparent distress of mind, desiring the store to be closed, and saying he had something of importance to com-municate to his wife. Though very slow to make the communication, after much persuasion he com menced by saying he was wholly unworthy of her and had wronged and injured her greatly. At this point he stopped, and firmly refused to say more, though strongly solicited, until she would first take a solemn oath she would forgive him, though steadily refusing, on the plea she knew not what to for-give, she finally yielded, and took the oath. He then said, he had married her under an as-respectable people, and he did not know whether she would make him a good wife or not, and thinking if he was not married in his own name, the tie would not be binding, and no barm done; if on the contrary, both were eventually satisfied, a second marriage could be solemnized.

On being asked about his parents and the letter received from Charleston, he replied that he told his father what he had done, and desired him to act harmoniously. He then said he had just received a letter from his father, telling him to throw himself upon the mercy of his wife, and she would forgive him. On being asked where his parents re-sided, he answered, at Harrisburg. In this, said he, I have deceived you and spoken falsely, but in all things else, I have been trutful and honorable.

Who can appreciate the consternation of that wife as she listened? Who can picture her dismay, as she contemplated her position? But how does she act in the matter? Does she pour forth a torrent of invective upon the author of all this agony of or invective upon the author of air this agony of soul? Does she cast upon him the reproaches that abused human nature, that a wronged, and greatly injured woman would be likely to under such trying circumstances? No, she turned to him with a quiet dignity, but with a soul full of agony in her voice, and said, 'Oh, Theodore, how, how could you find it in your heart thus to act, when you knew was frank, candid, truthiul, and honorable toward you in all things. He begged her to desist, bursting into an agony of tears, and entreating her to go with him the following day, and have a second marriage consummated. It was finally arranged that she should close up her business and go to her father's for a few days and have the second our father's for a few days, and have the second nup-tials solemnized at his house, and in the presence her that if she did not consent to be his that day, he would not live till the next morning. Awakening a woman's fears and sensibilities, will lead her to do what otherwise she would not in the calm reign of reason. She listened and yielded, and betore the day closed she had become the wife of Theodore Collem (alias Nathaniel J. Bird.) the theoretical trunking that he would bring them when he came up in a few days, and she must had ready to depart on his arrival. After reading the above, his new made bride and bade him adjeu, he, at the same time assuring and bade him adieu, he, at the same time assuring her that she would see him in two or three days. Arrived at her father's, she prepared to go for little Harry, he was brought, and on the evening of the arrival of the mother and child from school, the post brought her a letter from the fiend whose pretended name she bore. In it, he stated that he had liquidated certain dedts for her, tkat he had seen her father in New York, that he had received from his own father the money for which he had written

But it had no effect upon this 'marble-hearted fiend,' for the daywhich he had fixed upon to call for her came, but he came not with it. Words are inadequate to express the agonized feelings of that injured woman throughout the days and nights of silent watching. He had aroused her fears, and awakened a terrible suspicion which she in vain had strove to lull into q suspicions-of-she knew not what; and suspense to her was far worse to her than certainty—for suspense slays the very existence. She tossed wearily upon her couch, murmuring her fears in he tom, and sought relief by pouring out her thoughts and feelings of him, upon the senseless paper, in another letter of touching pathos, which after a few more days of agonizing uncertainty, brough an answer from the bigamist. It was very brief business of his father's, from whom he had receive ed a letter, urging him, when it was finished, to bring his wife and child to Charleston without delay. He wound up, stating that he would be with her in the course of a few days, and again admonished her to have little Harry ready.

> Once more the trusting heart of woman hoped for the best—once more cheerfulness returned, and > the smile was on her lip, and the light in her eye; But, an! short was the time—brief, indeed, the space for hope and rejoicing! Days—aye weeks - sped on, and no tidings to the wife of the departed husband. All her undefined fears were now confirmed, and in her own breast understood. But she suffered in silence. She was robbed of her peace of her property, of her happiness, that sustained her and her fatherless boy; but one thing he could not rob her of, and which still burns in her breast a steady flame to sustain her in this dire affliction —her honor. She possesses fortitude, perseverance, hope, and the consciousness of virtue; and though the damnable machinations of the the greatest villian that ever cursed the earth has thrown a slight upon her existence which time may never entirely eradicate, her duty to her child and an abiding trust in God's providence, will sustain her through every future trial, and enable her yet to successfully fight the battle of life. We have now brought our story to a conclu and we have now only further to add, that Bird, atter his desertion of her, proceeded again to Philadelphia and thence across to Camden, where he obtained rooms in a private boarding house, assuming his proper name. Here he married the daughter of the landlady, and four days afterwards he succeeded in marrying another young lady, of the highest respectability, with whom he had been acquainted a year previously. These two last mentioned victims lived within a hundred yards of each other! This, fortunately, was his last achievement, incarceration. The heartless monster swears that, if he ever gets out of prison alive, he will murder the mother of the last girl he married, for proceeding his arrest.—New York Sunday Dispatch.

arises the universal dread of growing old? Is it from an overweening vanity of personal charms? We see it in such as seem never to have dreamed of such a thing as beauty. From an instinctive hor ror of decay and dissolution creeping on by gradu-al, stealthy pace? But it is freely acknowledged by such as have a steadfast hope of a blessed im-mortality just beyond the region of infirmity and decay. They can look death in the face with composure, but tremble at his precursors—the tokens that he will surely release them from the bondage of flesh, and introduce them to a higher life. May we not trace this inherent, universal dread to man's original and undecaying nature—a faint vestige of his noble destiny, when there, was no derangement or suspension of his restless, active faculties? Deep within his nature there remains a panting for perpetual, everlasting progress, an instinctive shrink-ing from every symptom of the dark day of noth-ingness to which our mortal structure is doomed. However we may account for the fact, it is un worthy of the Christian.

Let him so discipline his mind while in youth and vigor as to be prepared to submit to the infirmities and trials of age, not as to an inevitable des tiny merely, but with a ceetain recognition of the will of a Heavenly Father. Through this shaded path lies the way to his home above. Like the noble king of day passing under a transient eclipse, let him retain his majestic character—he shall soon emerge with cloudless splendor. The Christian ineed, may triumph over old age as well as death The outward man may decay, and the metal struc ture may suffer to some extent, while the spirit is ripening for glory—rapidly assimilating to that image which he is soon to bear in heaven. When the vigor of life departs, the body and spirit take diveagent paths—the one is tending steadily back to its original elements—the other should rise as steadily to the high and holy destiny awaiting it in the mansions of heavenly rest.—N. The Globe: The official paper of Congress and newspaper for the people.—It will be seen by the annexed extract from a letter of General Washington to David Stewart, dated at New York-17th March, 1790, that the idea of such a paper as I propose to make the Globe, originated in the mind of the father of his country. He said:

"It is to be lamented that the editors of the different Gazettes in the Union do not more generally and more correctly (instead of stuffing their papers with scurrility and nonsensical declamation which few would read if they were apprised of their con-few would read if they were apprised of their con-tents) publish the debates in Congress on all great national questions. The principles upon which the difference of opinion arises; as well as the de-cisions, would then come fully before the public, and afford the best data for its judgment." Sparks' Writings of Washington, vol. 10, p. 84,

In surrendering my interest in the organ of a great political party, I cherished the purpose of continuing the Congressional Globe, and, if possible in time, to derfect it into a full highery of the action of Congress, giving the debates accurated and fully with the proceedings—all stamped wi the variety of an official record. From the passa of the letter of General Washington, which I hav quoted, it will be perceived that he thought this of the letter of General Washington, which I hav quoted, it will be perceived that he thought this office might be combined with that of a regular newspaper; and it is certain that the avidity of the public for news of the less important kind greatly contributes to give wings to the weightier matter which may be called Congressional news.

Having succeeded in my purpose of perfecting the reports of the debates in Congress and giving inem the official stamp, I now propose to send them abroad, in connection with the news of the day, in such haste as shall outstrip full and accurate intelligence sent from the seat of government in any other form whatever. It will even anticipate the scraps of news forwarded to cities within two hundred and fifty miles of Washington by telpate the scraps of news forwarded to caues within a two hundred and fifty miles of Washington by telegraph. Before the events thus transmitted are published in the morning papers, (for instance, of the city of New York,)the Globe containing them will have reached the post office of that city by the Express Mail of the previous night. The process by which this will effected I now lay before the limits.

I will have a corps of sixteen Reporters in Congress; each in succession will take notes during five minutes, and then retire, prepare them for the Press, put them slip by slip in the hands 8f compositors, and thus while a debate is going on in Congress, it will be put in type, and in a few minutes after it is ended its will be in print. I shall by this means be enabled to send that R. this means be enabled to send by the Express mail of 5 o'clock p. m. for the East, West and North and by that of 9 o'clock p. m. for the South, all the proceedings of Congress up to the ordinary hour of adjournment. Thus the accurate debates of Congress will reach the city, two hundred and lifty miles from the capital, before their delly morning papers are in circulation. papers are in circulation.

The miscellaneos news I shall be careful to gather from remote sections of the country by tell-egraph. I will obtain from the Executive Depart-ments, through official sources; the matters of mo-ment transacted in them, and, through agents emment transacted in them, and, through agents em-ployed for that purpose, all the city news of con-sequence in sufficient time to be put into the Globe and mailed in the express mail trains. In this way I hope to create a new era in the dissemination of news from Washington before the public mind at a distance had received its first impressions from ir-responsible telegraphic despatches; or by letter with

Washington has now become so great a centre of political interest during all the year—the proceedings of the Executive Departments, and the information collected by them, even during the recess of Congress, is of so much importance to the interest of every section of the country—that I shall continue the publication of the daily paper nermacontinue the publication of the daily paper permanently, with a view to become the vehicle of the carliest and most correct intelligence. It is part of my plan to reduce the price of the

It is part of my plan to reduce the price of the daily paper to half that of similar daily papers; and thus I hope to extend its circulation so as to invite advertisements. I will publish advertisements of the government. To subscribers in the cities I hope to submit such terms as will induce them to the Union, where the Globe is sent daily under the franks of members of Congress, all of whom take it and some of them a large number of copies. The installation of a new administration and a new Congress portends much change in the course of public affairs as the result of the next session.—Many vast interests which were shought up in the last Congress were laid over by the democratic majority to await the action of a democratic execmajority to await the action of a democratic executive. The new modelling of the tariff; the new land system; the question of giving homesteads and making every man a freeholder who may and making every man a freeholder who may choose to become one; the approximation of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by a national railroad across the territory of the Union; reform in the Army, Navy, and civil offices— all these great questions, with a thousand minor ones, deeply affecting multitudes of men and every State in the Union, will, now being matured by public opinion come up for the government's decision. These new issues, co-operating with old ones, coming up to be disposed of by new actors on the scenes at Washington, will be apt to modify greatly if not alter essentially, the party organizations of the country.

To these elements of interest another is likely to be introduced by the interposition of the agita-tions of Europe. After nearly forty years of peace in Europe, there is an evident restlessness that in Europe, there is an evident restlessness that now seems franght with tendencies threatening war; and if war comes, in all likelihood there will follow such universal change that the United States can scarcely hope to escape its vortex. Indeed, from late events it is apparent that our Government is already drawn into European difficulties. These circumstances are calculated to draw the path is myst toward the path of the path is myst towards. public mind towards the next Congress with much

The Daily Globe will be printed on fine paper, double royal size, with small type, (brevier and nonpareil) at five dollars a year.

The Congressional Globe will also be printed on a double sheet, in book form, royal quarto size, each number containing sixteen pages. The Congressional Globe paper will be made up of the proceedings of Congress and the running debates as given by the reporters. The speeches which members may choose to write out themselves will, together with the message of the President of the United States, the reports of the Executive Departments, and the laws passed by Congress, be added in an appendix. Formerly I received subscriptions for the Congressional Globe and Appendix separately. But this has not been found satisfactory, inasmuch as it gave an incomplete view of the transactions in Congress; and therefore I have concluded not to sell them spart, considering that neighbors can have the advantage of both by clubbing in case individuals shall find it too onerous to be at the charge of both.

United States, the reports of the Executive Departments, and the laws passed by Congress, be added in an appendix. Formerly I received subscriptions for the Congressional Globe and Appendix separately. But this has not been found satisfactory, inasmuch as it gave an incomplete view of the transactions in Congress; and therefore I have concluded not to sell' them apart, considering that neighbors can have the advantage of both by clubbing in case individuals shall find it too onerous to be at the charge of both.

To facilitate the circulation of the Congressional Globe, and cheapen it to subscribers, Congress passed last year a joint resolution making it free of postage. I annex it, as the law may not be accessible to postmasters generally:

Joint resolution providing for the distribution of the Laws of Congress and the debates thereon.

With a view to the cheap circulation of the laws of Congress and the debates contributing to the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the communication between the representatives and the constituent bodies:

"Be it 'resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress.
