TEBMS:

Thou'st heard me say my love would last When thine would long have ceased— For naught can bind the fickle heart That pants to be released :

But soon I heard unfeeling hearts But soon I heard unfeeling hearts Thy frequent wandorings tell; I blamed the not-for ah, I knew Thy roving ways too well! If once set free, the open cage Fails to entice the dove, And man astray as little heeds The lures of "Woman's Love!"

I'm never heard to speak of thee-I'm never seen to weep; My smiles are like the rays that light The cold, unconscious deep; But in this heart there bides a gloom No morrow may remove, And mine alas! is "Woman's Fate," For mine was "Woman's Love !"

The Wrecker. A CORNISH LEGEND.

Towards the close of the sixteenth century, borrid custom prevailed on the coast of Cornwa els to their destruction in stormy weather, by fastening a lantern to a horse's head and leading it about on the cliffs, in order that the bewildered mariner, mistaking it for the light of a vessel, might be induced to shape his course to wards i This atrocious expedient was often suc tul. The devoted crew dreamed not of their danger until warned of it, too late, by the foaming breakers that burst upon them from the shore; and the vessel speedily became the prey of a set of ruthless barbarians, who, to secure themselves with impunity in their plunder, often murdered those who escaped drowning, and then called their booty a 'God-send.

it must have been taken, and, after glancing at it for a moment, yelled out with supernatural energy: 'Oh, my son, my poor son!' and fell senseless at the feet of her husband. Ter-loggan endeavored to master his feelings until the t could be ascertained. He arose with the dawn, and hastened to the spot where he had left the mudered corpse. It was indeed his son. The stroke of retribution had been complete. Overwhelmed by despair, and stung by remorse, to which his heart had ever before been impervious, he de-termined on self destruction. A few days af-

For a right-down 'jolly' enjoyable place com-rend me to Naples. London is business like, Paris 'fast' and gay, Copenhagen dull, Hamburg sensual and easy, Berlin literary and 'genteel,' and Rome natiquarian and lovely even in decay; but Narles s downright happy. It is pre-eminently the city of all nations, all vehicles, and all trades. Such contrasts cannot be found in another place in Europe Every body knows how Naples looks, on paper every body goes into raptures about the bay of Na-dies, everyhody who has seen it boasts of it, and everybody that hasn't seen it wants to. For a single picture that greets the eye at once, it probably presents about the finest display of water and land city, country, volcano and crag, island and main and, that can be found on the eastern continent .--But it is with its social and characteristic leatures as a city that I have to deal. Our steamer came to anchor near the quay, and we were soon sur-rounded by crowds of boats. New York cabmen could not be more vociferous than were these wa ter-ouzels for our patronage. One chap, (I shall never forget him,) a Greek, spoke, I believe, every anguage in Europe. In English and Yankee slang he would beat any blackguard in New York or London. He begged to be the very humble servan f any passenger, no matter from what country and he would greet them in their own language, English, French, German, Spanish, Italian, Greek, Maltese, Turkish and Arabic, he said he could speak, and nearly all of these he had occasion to peak to different persons on board. He was a leght made, lithe, active fellow, about twenty years old—rather dark complexion, very black eyes, thin lips, and a sinister, knavish expression that was not pleasing. His English was as pure and free of foreign accent as any one who had spent his life in New York or London. He recommended the New York hotel, but would conduct passengers anywhere.
