MAX STOLPRIAU.

A TALE OF BASHFULNESS.

There is a certain misfortune in the world, not usually enumerated in the list of common misiortunes, but which, nevertheless, ought to be. I afford a living illustration of the truth of my assertion.

My father, God rest his soul, sent me diligently to school; there I gained some knowledge, although our city schools at that period were none of the best.

Every one said, 'Max has talent, but he is shy and awkward, cannot adapt himself to the ways of the world, is unacquainted with the usages of society, and never knows what to do with his hands and feet; otherwise he is a good and clever fellow enough. Such was the general impression of me. withal, so that I ran off when unknown persons approached; my eyes never knew where to look for a resting place when addressed by a stranger, and if called upon to meet a lady with civility and politeness, I became rooted to the spot, speechless, and stiff as a ramfod. Enough—politeness and ease of manner. as they are called, are concerns no less pertaining to life and life's comfort, than bread, potatoes, or a glass of water.

Many young gentlemen, as I have often observed, are greatly wanting in these respects. Many a one on going into society is sadly at a loss how to dispose of his extremities, and would, one can easily perceive, have much rather left them at home. Many such an unfortunate one knows not where to quarter his hands, thrusting them at one moment into his waistcoat, at another into his breeches pockets, then in despair raising one or other to his occiput, tively affluent, than I, then in my thirtieth year, was led to seek the hand of a young lady, who to other qualifications added beauty, virtue, amiability, and wealth besides. I was well pleased with my pretty Barbara; matters were quickly arranged, and nothing remained but to cultivate the acquaintance. I was accordingly to meet her at the house of her cousin, and an invitation to dine was forwarded to me. Of large parties I had a perfect horror; my aforesaid defective education making me shy and timid, but then what will no man do to secure the favor of a pretty Barbara? So I put on my best Sunday suit, white silk stockings, a bran new hair bag, and apple green coat, with large pearl buttons—in a word, made myself smart as a bridegroom. On reaching the door of the cousin's house, however, my heart began to thump scrape, and what an appearance I must preagainst my ribs, as though I nad a smithy within my breast. 'If I could only feel assured there will be no party,' thought I-'would to heaven that it were over.' Fortunately I found the cousin alone, making up an account in his study. 'You are somewhat late, friend Stolpriau,' said he. 1 made twenty inclinations right and left and laughed in perfect agony to look agreeable, for the fear of meeting a large party engrossed every thought. The cousin having finished, looked round show myself light and graceful, as well as clever and gallant, sprang forward, scraping first with one foot, then with the other, in all directions, and not perceiving a female domestic just before me who was in the act of dishing up a pie, dashed my head with such force into her back, as to send known in the surrounding country by the the pie flying out of the dish on the floor; and so with compliments, and ducking, and bowing, I blindly advanced. I felt as tho' I were in battle, and about to rush on the enemy's guns. What civil things were said on the part of the company I know not; as yet I had not the courage to look up, but continued like one possessed, bowing and scraping, and ejaculating 'your humble servant,' in all directions, until cut short by a fresh mishap.

I had in fact reached the pie which still lay there, for the servant had not sufficienty recovered from her fright and loss of ridicule. breath, and stood staring at the masterpiece of cookery dashed to pieces on the loor, without an effort to remove it. All at once, while engaged in making fresh inclination, my unfortunate left foot wandered into the pastry. I saw nothing, for all had become dark before my eyes .-Disgracefully, but naturally enough, my foot slid from under me; in an instant personal and political balance were lost, and down I came, measuring my whole length, just five feet seven, on the floor, to the no small alarm of some, the irrepressible laughter of others of the large and worshipful company there assembled. In falling, I brought down two chairs. which I had seized hold of in order to save myself, together with a young and pretty female, who in all probability was at that moment about to seat herselt, but now with speed equal to that of her chair, came rotting on the floor beside me. Gracious heavens! it was my Barbara!

A terrible clamor arose, and as I lay there, I roared lustily, too, for seeing in addition to myself and the two chairs. lady stretched on the floor. I felt persuaded that a shock of earthquake had taken place. To my great relief I soon found that no earthquake had caused this melancholy fall, but as already narrated, only a veal pastry. We got up. The cousin treated the whole affair as an excellent joke. It was very well for him to joke, but I could have wept nay died with shame and vexation. I wen to the mantle piece, without offering one word of apology, but as all were laughing and giggling around, I laughed too, and threw from time to time stolen glances at

Of the assembled guests I ventured only to take a rapid glance at intervals. Soup was served round. Barbara offered me some-but how could I accept it?-She herself was yet unprovided. Compliments were exchanged, and I already foresaw that some new evil would arise out of these abominable civilities. Hence I became more and more pressing, and looking imploringly into the face of my charmer, forgot the plate altogether. The consequence was that I poured the burning soup into Barbara's lap and over her clothes, and in endeavoring hastily to withdraw it sent the remainder into my own lap, deluging alike my garments and my finger napkin. It was a fraternal division. I shall never forget it. I remember all as though it had occurred but yesterday. It was

In alarm I rose precipitately from the table, and commenced a retreat towards the kitchen, in order to wash myself, and while so doing, for I had inadvertently buttoned a corner of the table cloth instead of the table napkin to my waistcoat, down came plates and dishes, boiled and roast meats, salad, spinach, bottles and salt cellars, flesh and fowl, knives and forks, spoons and glasses. All rushed after me with a fearful crashing and clatter. The guests, on witnessing all the good things thus suddenly withdrawn and many a delicacy on which they had set their hearts come full in career after me, sat open-mouthed and riveted to the spot with astonishment.

At first on seeing the plates and dishes closely following on my heels, I could attribute the freak only to witchcraft, but the cousin springing with both feet on to the cloth brought it, together with the attached button, away with a jerk, and bro't me to a sense of my situation.

Caution: Caution 1 — Thomas Armitage's Lightning Rode. Beware of Impostors and swindlers. In order to prevent a repetition of the frauds so extensively carried on during the last two years, by a set of secondrels who travelled over the country, and represented themselves as my agents, and in many instances exhibited forged certificates of agency. I now give notice that all and acknowledged before Alderman Henry Simpson, of Philadelphia; they have also, my name and place of business on their wagons. I believe them all to be strictly honest, and fully acquainted with the business of butting up Lightning Rods, which they will do at as low a price as they can be obtained to, to defraud myself and the public purchasers should be on their guard; thousands have been grossly deceived by purchasing useless afticles in the shape of Lightning Rods, having prever, lead, copper, zinc and iron points, either, or all of which are good for nothing. My Electro Magnet Lightning rods, have been examined by many of the most scientific men in the world, who have pronounced them to be the only rods that they have ever seen, which are calculated to save lives and property from destruction by lightning—among these are Professors Henry M'Murtrie, James M'Clintock, Walter R. Johnson, of the U. S. Paten Office, E. J. Carr, Dr. T. E.
