ADDRESS OF THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

To the People of Pennsylvania :

FELLOW CITIZENS :--- In the performance of our duty, we lately addressed you on the subject of Know-Nothingism. w. warned you against the insidoius appeal of a party, for one principle which establishes a religious test for office, a thing expressly prohibited by the Constitution of the United States, and by that of Pennsylvania. A party which seeks to practically disfranchise one class of American citizens, because of their religious creed; another class, because of the place of their birth, and to proscribe a still more numerous class, because they will not deny to others. the rights which they claim for themselves. We reminded you that these States had been founded by immigrants who fied hither for self-protection from this same persecuting spirit. That by mutual toleration in matters of religion, and by an equal participation, in the common concerns of social life and government, these rights of each were guaranteed by all; that to wrest them from any citizen, however weak or humble, was to substitute might for right and thus subvert the great principle of political equality, on which alone rests our common security and general welfare.

That to do this in secret, and under mu tual pledges and oaths, and above all, to do it under the name of Americanism, was to destroy all confidence in the capability of men for self-government, to confound local prejudice with the virtue of patriotism, to exalt the profession of a creed above the practice of genuine Christianity, to bring Democratic institutions into contempt, and to cover their founders with

If the rankling hatreds and fierce feuds, the social wrongs and lawless outrages, which have characterized this secret party, had been in like manner occusioned by all others, society itself could not have existed. Brief, therefore, as has been its career, it has convinced every reflecting man that its tendencies are counter to the genius of our governments and opposed to the teaching of their founders. We have, therefore, seen it overthrown by the Democracy in the South, and disorganized and broken-or blended with Abolitionism in the North. Such has been the se-

Let them weigh well the following words of the conservative WEBSTER

" If we might regard our country as personated in the spirit of Washington; if we might consider him as representing her n her past renown, in her present prosperity and her future career, and as in that character demanding of us all to account for our conduct as political men or as private citizens, how should he answer him who has ventured to talk of disunion or dismemberment? or how should he answe him who dwells perpetually on local inter ests, and fans every kindling flame of loca prejudice ?
