EDUCATION—INDUSTRY AND PATIENCE—NECESSARY TO ITS ATTAINMENT.
Delivered before the Gen. Conv. of Lycæums, Jan. 10, 1855.

Ladies and Gentlemen.—Mr. President On beholding such a respectable concourse of intelligent persons of both sexes...

On an occasion like this, I scarcely know what to say; not for the want of suitable subjects, but because of my own incompetency for the task I have undertaken.

It is hardly necessary to tell you that the superiority and usefulness, as well as lappiness of man, depend, in a great measure, upon the extent and quality of his education.

For these improvements—for the superiority of the white man over the red, physically, mentally, and more vigorous race...

When I speak of an education, I view it in its true sense; not as confined to the mind, but as extending also to the body and heart.

It is not in the value of education so palpably evidenced as in the permanent and growing interest everywhere manifested in its progress.

and to remedy this evil, a system of Free Schools has been established and fostered by many States of this Union...

The love of money, which has long been considered one of the chief characteristics of the human race, and the false notion that it promotes the happiness of man...

Lycæums too, such as we now have for the honor to represent, are here and there springing up to aid the cause of education.

When once the mind is imbued with talent is fully aroused, combined with the habits of industry and patience, you might as well attempt to obtain the forked lightning...

An EXACTING HUSBAND.—Weyerly, the comedian, married a girl of eighteen, when he was verging on eighty.

I have to thank you for the parting reassurance which you have given me, and which I will treasure up as a precious memory.

For the attainment of an education, the noblest and most desirable of all attainments, how little industry and patience are sometimes practiced...

For the attainment of an education, the
noblest and most desirable of all attainments,
how little industry and patience are
sometimes practiced...

Such are the efforts and consequent failures of the superficial and indolent scholar, who is necessary to the attainment of an education as air and light are to the support and continuance of human life.

It has been said that there is no royal road to learning. This I deny; knowledge is more easily acquired when sought in the right than in the wrong way... will be sorely disappointed as he, who by outward conformity only to the laws of God, expects inward salvation...

The road that leads to the summit of knowledge is steep and rugged; but here and there the path is strewn with flowers pleasing to the eye and sweet to the taste...

CLIVATING Ice.—It appears may be cultivated in great quantities in Lancaster.
Yankee ingenuity and forethought are overcoming even the caprices of old winter, and forcing him in spite of himself to yield their industry...
