For the Intelligencer. CUI BONO? BY JOHN H. BAZLEY.

Pray what is the use of grasping for gain? Of boundless desires which tend to maintain Injustice and wrong? Or what is the good of distinction and wealth, Obtained at the expense of honor and health? This answer in song.

Does greatness consist in tact and display? Is truth of no use in this polite day?

Must vice ever reign ? Expediency, policy, fraud and the like, At the base of religion and honesty strike, And what is the gain ?

Shall principles true, be regarded as nought Will right never be our first and last thought Must might be the rule? Shall a nation like ours, which boasts of its deeds In liberty's cause, be sown with the seeds Of crime and misrule?

Shall we follow the footsteps of folly pride. That those who observe us may laugh and deride, And republics condemn? Oh no! let us rather be wise in good time,

Less showy and vain with more reason and rhyme,
And wear truth's diadem. Grant, father of all things, that we may desire Only those that are good and which thou dost require, And this our thema :

Men's wants are but few when wisely restrained, Self-denial is better than wealth ill obtained, And virtue's supreme

Old Bullion goes down to the Bank in omnibus about 10 A. M. About the same time young Bullion is going it with a fast horse to "the great race," incurring the danger of being run over, of being run over,

"Does he live about here ?" inquired

"Well, I don't know for sartin, but he lives somewhere in Connecticut. This is the first time I was ever so far from home. I live in the State of New Hampshire, and it is dreadful unpleasant. I feel a little dubersome about riding all alone in a stage with gentlemen that I never saw before in night.

"There is no danger, ma'am," said the driver, "the gentlemen won't hurt you." 'Well, perhaps they won't, but it's very unpleasant for a lady to be so far from ome. I live in the State of New Hampshire, and this little girl's -----

"You had better get in ma'am," said the driver, with praiseworthy moderation. "Well. I don't know but I may as well," she replied; and after informing us once more that she was from the State of New Hampshire, and that her husband had been dead two years, she got in and took her

'Oh! four and sixpence," and after a good deal of fumbling and shaking of her pockets, she at last produced a half dollar and a York shilling and put them into the driver's hand.

'That's not enough ma'am,' said the driver; I want ninepence more.' 'What ain't we in York State?' she asked

'No ma'am,' replied the driver, 'it's six shillings, York money.'

'Well,' said the lady, I used to be quite good at reckoning when I was at home in New Hampshire; but since I've got so far from home, I b'live I'm begining to lose my mental faculties.'

'I'll take that other ninepence, if you please," said the driver in a voice a little nearer impatience. At last, after making allusion three or four times to her native State, and her husband, (happy man) she handed the driver a ninepence, and we were once more in motion.

'Do you think it's dangerous on this road?' began the lady, as soon as the door was closed. 'I'm a very lengthy way from home, in the State of New Hampshire, and if anything should happen I don't know what I should do. I'm quite familiar with travelling. I'm a widow lady. My husband, this little girl's father has been dead these two years coming this spring, and I'm going with her to the Springs; she has got a dreadful bad complaint in her stomach. Are you going to the Springs, sir ?' she asked of an invalid passenger. He shook his head feebly in reply.

It never wearies of its blows, and by the time that age has come, when the first wrinkles furrow the pensive brow, what gaps are already visible, and how many of those we loved best are gone! First one died in the very flower of youth, her forehead decked in its flaxen curls, and she still smiling upon life, her heart still brimming with joy ous anticipations. Then another followed: and, then, another; a fourth fell suddenly, and in the very pride of his strength. Death strikes on, and soon we no longer count those we have lost; we think of them sometimes, and those who remain last have their memories full of phantoms which beacon them to hasten.
