INDIAN SUMMER.

The weather has been very fine; our "Indian Summer, with its fine skies, fine, airy and hazy horizon, having come upon us earlier than usual.—Montreal Gazette, Oct. 12.

There is a time, just when the frost
Prepares to pave old Winter's way,
When Autumn, in a reverie lost,
The mellow daytime dreams away;
When Summer comes, in musing mind,
To gaze once more on hill and dell,
To mark how many sheaves they bind,
And see if all are ripened well.

With balmy breath she whispers low,
The dying flowers look up and give
Their sweetest incense, ere they go,
For her who made their beauties live.
She enters 'neath the woodland's shade;
Her zephyrs lift the lingering leaf,
And bear it gently where are laid
The loved and lost ones of its grief.

At last, old Autumn, rising, takes
Again his sceptre and his throne;
With boisterous hands the tree he shakes,
Intent on gathering all his own.
Sweet Summer, sighing, flies the plain,
And waiting Winter, gaunt and grim,
Sees miser Autumn hoard his grain,
And smiles to think it's all for him.

Serving a Subpœna.

It is singular what shifts love will make to accomplish its objects. Bolts, gates and bars are of little avail against Cupid's pick-lock contrivance; his cunning will devise ways and means to open them all. A young gentleman had courted a fair damsel of New York, and it was supposed that the two would in time "become one." Some little quarrel of a trivial nature, as lovers' quarrels generally are, occurred. Neither would confess the wrong to be on their side—presents and correspondence were mutually sent back, and the match was broken off. The young gentleman immediately started for New Orleans to enter into commercial business, thinking that distance would lessen the attachment he really felt for the young lady.

When woman is injured, or thinks she is injured, by the one she loves, she is more apt than the male sex "to bite off her own nose" as the saying is, to inflict pain, and be revenged on the offending objects. A gentleman that the young lady had once rejected renewed his proposals and was accepted, within a week after her old lover had embarked for the South. On reaching New Orleans, he found that distance, instead of weakening his attachment, only made the lady dearer, and he became melancholy and low-spirited. The first letter he received from New York from a friend of his, announced that his old flame was shortly to be married to another. His course was quickly taken; the next morning found him on board a packet-ship bound for Gotham.

The passage, unfortunately, was long, and the poor fellow chafed and fretted so much that the passengers began to think him deranged or else a fugitive escaping from justice. The instant the vessel touched the wharf, he darted for the office of his friend, the lawyer. It is to be supposed the latter was much surprised to see his friend, imagining him a couple thousand miles away.

"My dear fellow, your are in time to see the wedding. Miss ——, your old sweetheart, is to be married this morning at eleven o'clock. To tell you the truth, I don't believe there is much love about it; and the girl really thinks more of one hair of your head, than the fortunate bridegroom's whole body."

"Good Heaven! where is she to be married? in the church?"

"No, at her father's house."

"My dear fellow,—I—I—yes—no—yes, I will have it. Have you any case coming on in either of the courts at 11 o'clock?"

"Yes."

"Then fill up a subpœna with the bridegrooms name. Don't stop to ask any questions. It matters not whether he knows anything about the parties in the suit. By Heavens! Julia shall be mine."

His friend saw the object at once, and promised to carry out the matter. The subpœna was made out and placed in the hands of a clerk to serve on the unsuspecting bridegroom the instant he should leave his residence, and was dispatched in a cab to watch the house. About ten minutes before eleven, as the soon-to-be-happy man was about entering a coach before the door of his residence, he was served with a subpœna.

"Can't help it," said the clerk, in reply to his gesticulating about "not knowing the parties—going to be married," &c.—"We cannot reach the Hall now before eleven—imprisonment for contempt," &c.

The bridegroom who was rather of a timid nature, finally consented, particularly as he promised to send a friend of his, who sat in the cab wrapped up in a large cloak, explaining the reasons of his absence. The reader can imagine who that person was.

Eleven o'clock came, but still no bridegroom. The guests were staring at each other; the priest began to grow impatient; and the bride that was to be, looked pale and agitated, when a carriage drove up and the bell rang. "There he is! there he is!" murmured many voices.

A gentleman did enter, whose appearance created almost as much astonishment as that of Edgar Ravenswood in the Hall of Ashton Castle at the marriage of Lucy Ashton, in Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor." The lady fainted; private explanation ensued between the parents and the lover; and the result was that in ten minutes the two real lovers were joined in the sacred bond of matrimony, much to the satisfaction of all.

The bridegroom that was to have been, afterwards made his appearance puffing and blowing. What he said and what he did, on beholding his rival, and being made acquainted with the condition of affairs, really was tragi-comical.

The story of the subpœna shortly afterwards leaked out, and has created so much amusement, that the poor fellow declares he will sue the lawyer for ten thousand dollars' damages in subpœnaing him as a witness in a case of which he knew nothing, and by which he lost a wife. It will be a novel suit indeed, if he should do so.

The Origin of Mankind.

A CATAWBA LEGEND.

There was a time when the world was an unbroken waste of rocks, hills and mountains, save only one small valley, which was distinguished for its luxuriance, and where reigned a perpetual summer.—At that time, too, the only human being who inhabited the earth was a woman, whose knowledge was confined to this valley, and who is remembered among the Catawbas as the mother of mankind. She lived in a cavern, and her food consisted of the honey of flowers and the sweet berries and other fruits of the wilderness.—Birds without number, and the wild streams which found a resting place in the valley made the only music which she ever heard. Among the wild animals, which were very numerous about her home, she wandered without any danger; but the beaver and doe were her favorite companions. In personal appearance she was eminently beautiful, and the lapse of years only had the tendency to increase the brightness of her eyes and the grace of her movements. The dress she wore was made of those bright green leaves which unfold the water lillies, and her hair was as long as the grass which fringed the waters of her native vale. She was the ruling spirit of a perennial world, for even the very flowers which bloomed about her sylvan home were never known to wither or die. In spite of her lonely condition she knew not what it was to be lonely; but ever and anon a strange desire found its way to her heart, which impelled her to explore the wild country which surrounded her home. For many days had she resisted the temptation to become a wanderer from her charming valley, until it so happened, on a certain morning, that a scarlet butterfly made its appearance before the door of her cave, and the hum of its wings invited her away. She obeyed the summons, and followed the butterfly far up a rocky ravine, until she came to the foot of a huge waterfall when she was deserted by her mysterious pilot, and first became acquainted with the emotion of fear. Her passage of the ravine had been comparatively easy; but when she endeavored, in her consternation, to retrace her steps, she found her efforts unavailing, and fell to the ground in despair. A deep sleep then overcame her senses, from which she was not awakened until the night was far spent, and then the dampness of the dew had fallen upon her soft limbs, and for the first time in her life did she feel the pang of a bodily pain. Forlorn and desolate indeed was her condition, and she felt that some great event was about to happen, when, as she uncovered her face and turned it to the sky, she beheld, bending over her prostrate form, and clothed in a cloud-like robe, the image of a being somewhat resembling herself, only that he was more stoutly made and of a much sterner aspect. Her first emotion at this strange discovery was that of terror; but as the mysterious being looked upon her in kindness, and raised her lovingly from the ground, she confided in his protection, and listened to his words until the break of day.

He told her that he was a native of the far-off sky, and that he had discovered her in her forlorn condition while traveling from the evening to the morning star. In coming to her rescue, he had broken a command of the Great Spirit or the Master of Life, and as he was afraid to return to the sky, he desired to spend his days in her society upon earth. With joy did she accept this proposal, and, as the sun rose above the distant mountains, the twain returned in safety to the luxuriant vale, where as man and woman, for many moons, they lived and loved in perfect tranquility and joy.

In process of time the woman became a mother, from which time the happiness of the twain became more intense, but they at the same time endured more troubles than they had ever known before. The man was unhappy because he had offended the Master of Life, and the mother was anxious about the comfort and happiness of her newly born child. Many and devout were the prayers they offered to the Great Spirit for his guidance and protection, for they felt that from them were to be descended a race of beings more numerous than the stars of heaven. The Great Spirit had compassion on these two inhabitants of the earth, and, in answer to their prayers, he caused a mighty wind to pass over the world, making the mountains crowd closely together, and rendering the world more useful and beautiful by the prairies and valleys and rivers which now cover it from the rising to the setting of the sun.

BANKS IN 1837, 1847 AND 1857.—The number of banks in the Union in 1837 was 788; in 1847 it was 715; in 1857 it is 1460.

The bank notes in circulation in 1837 amounted to $149,185,890; in 1847 they amounted to $105,519,766; they amount in 1857 to $214,778,822.

The specie held by the banks of the Union in 1837 $37, 915,540; in 1847 it was $35,-132,516; in 1857 it is $68,456,887.

The indebtedness of the people to the banks of the Union in 1837 was $525,115,702; their indebtedness in 1847 was $310,202,945; and in 1857 it is $684,349,838.

The capital stock of the banks in the Union in 1837 was $209,772,094; in 1847 it was $204,070,722; and in 1857 it is $370,834,174.

Facts speak louder than words. Compare 1837 with 1847; then compare 1857 with 1847; and tremble at the resemblance between '57 and 37.—Richmond Examiner.

☞ The Albany Evening Journal says it is a little singular that while good flour sells by the load for $4,20 to $4,80, it is impossible to buy a single barrel of good flour for less than $6,50 or $7. Why is this? Why should there be such a wide difference between the wholesale and retail price of an article? If good flour can be bought for $4,80 by the boat load, it should be sold at retail for $5 or 5,25. Such is not the case, however. For the past eight weeks, sales by retail were $2 in advance of the wholesale rates. This is very wrong, and very oppressive, especially to those who are short of funds, or who have been thrown out of work.

India.

India matters are by no means cheering for Englishmen. Havelock has been obliged to retire a second time from Lucknow, and at last advices, with a force of but nine hundred men, was exposed to attack from four different points and no hope of relief for a fortnight.—The mutinies are said to be spreading, confidence in the Bombay troops is diminishing, and Calcutta is thought to be in serious danger of an outbreak. General Nicholson is reported to have arrived before Delhi, and with his troops would swell the forces before that place to about 11,000 men, and an assault was contemplated for the 20th of August.

VISION.

BY THE GLADE BARD.

'Twas Autumn, and the setting sun
Shone radiant over field and wood,
And threw a mellow sheen of light
Around the tranquil spot I stood.

The forest trees were clothed in garbs,
Of variegated colors bright,
Which dazzling fell upon my sight,
In clareobscures of various light.

My wandering footsteps led me through
A gloomy wood, near by a mount,
That there in awful grandeur rose,
And met the eye, with magic front.

And as I gazed with wondering eye,
Rose on my ear a fearful din;
Methought I saw a vision dark,
Flit to the mount on saffron wing.

A wild sad cry, denoting pain,
Fell solemnly upon my ear;
I heard it o'er, and o'er again—
"How long wilt thou torment me here!"

A silent awe ran through my breast,
A fear, for which I can't account;
And fearfully, the echoing sound
In accents low, died on the mount.

But still I heard that awful cry,
Which made me quail with dread and fear;
Come from that mount with accents wild,
"How long wilt thou torment me here!"

Cold horrors seized my trembling frame,
My limbs refused to bear their weight;
And languidly I sank away
Into a dim, forgetful state.

And when again my senses came,
The wild, strange cry was heard no more;
But still, tradition does declare,
It was the homicidal Moore.

And still around that ancient mount,
When all the world is in repose,
His lingering shade is seen to float,
And there bewail his endless woes.

NEW PROVIDENCE, 1857.

Stick to your Business.

There is nothiog which should be more frequently impressed upon the minds of young men than the importance of steadily pursuing some one business. The frequent changing from one employment to another is one of the most common errors committed, and to it may be traced more than half the failures of men in business, and much of the discontent and disappointments that render life uncomfortable. It is a very common thing for a man to become dissatisfied with his business, and to desire to change it for some other, and what seems to him will prove a more lucrative employment; but in nine cases out of ten it is a mistake. Look around you, and you will find abundant verification of our assertion.

Here is a young man who commenced life as a mechanic, but for some cause imagined that he ought to have been a doctor; and after a hasty shallow preparation has taken up the saddle bags only to find that work is still work, and that his patients are no more profitable than his workbench, and the occupation not a bit more agreeable.

Here are two young clerks; one of them is content, when his first term of service is over, to continue a clerk until he has money enough to commence business on his own account; the other can't wait, but starts off without capital and with a limited experience, and brings up after a few years in a court of insolvency, while his former comrade, by patient perseverance, comes out at last with a fortune.

That young lawyer who becomes disheartened because briefs and cases did not crowd upon him while he was yet redolent of calf-bound volumes, and had small use for red tape, who concluded that he had mistaken his calling, and so plunged into politics, finally settled down into the character of a meddling pettifogger, scrambling for his daily bread.

There is an honest farmer who has toiled a few years, got his farm paid for, but does not grow rich very rapidly, as much for lack of contentment mingled with his industry as anything, though he is not aware of it—he hears the wonderful stories of California, and how fortunes may be had for the trouble of picking them up, mortgages his farm to raise money, goes to the land of gold, and after months of hard toil, comes home to begin again at the bottom of the hill for a more weary and less successful climbing up again.

Mark the men in every community who are notorious for ability and equally notorious for never getting ahead, and you will usually find them to be those who never stick to one business long, but always forsake their occupation just when it begins to be profitable.

Young man, stick to your business. It may be that you have mistaken your calling—if so, find it out as quickly as possible and change it; but don't let any uneasy desires to get along fast, or a dishonest calling, lead you to abandon it. Have some honest occupation, and then stick to it; if you are stitking type, stick away at them; if you are selling oysters, keep on selling them; if you are at the law, hold fast to that profession—pursue the business you have chosen, persistently, industriously, and hopefully; if there is anything in you, it will appear and turn to account in that as well, or better, than in any other calling—only if you are a loafer, forsake that line of life as speedily as possible, for the longer you stick to it the worse it will stick to you.—Hunt's Merchants' Magazine.

GROSS MALPRACTICE.—A prosecution was some time ago instituted against the Commercial Bank of Philadelphia for charging a greater rate of interest than it is permitted to do by its charter. But about the time the case was to be tried, Attorney General FRANKLIN stepped in and entered a nolle prosequi—discontinued the suit! Banks are scarcely capable of a more injurious or villainous violation of law than that charged against this Bank, yet the Attorney General shields it from punishment while he admits its guilt, upon the ground that it has promised not to do so again—a promise any detected criminal would make to avoid punishment! Verily it is time to have a Democratic Governor.—Clinton Democrat.

AWFUL BREAK DOWN OF THE NIGGER WORSHIPPERS.—This financial revulsion is making awful work of the nigger worshippers. In Pennsylvania they have been reduced to a mere fraction, and even in Ohio, where they deemed themselves invincible, they are probably defeated. At this rate, against our November election the Seward oligarchy will be swept out of power, from Coney Island to Dunkirk. The republican party has its day; the Know Nothings have had their day, and a great political revolution and reconstruction of parties is before us. Let the democracy, meantime, set to work, and carry the State of New York. The absolute destruction of black republicanism is the first part of the programme of the new revolution.—N. Y. Herald.

Murder Will Out.

The subjoined is taken from the New Haven Register of Oct. 9th:

"About a year since, a young lad, named Sage, disappeared suddenly from his father's house, near Middletown, and was last seen going to the barn, near which lived a laboring man, whom the lad had frequently accused of stealing his father's grain. On the disappearance of the lad, the man alluded to was arrested on suspicion of having foully disposed of him, but was acquitted for the want of proof. At the time it was shown that the lad had not been seen alive since his visit to the barn, and a hole in the ice in the Connecticut river, at a point nearest the barn, gave color to the suspicion that the boy had been killed and put through this hole. About a month since, the body of a lad floated ashore near the mouth of the river, and, although the head was gone, the parents of young Sage were so confident that it was their son, that they assumed and buried it as such.

"We now learn, that within a day or two, a sailor has returned to Middletown, and voluntarily, before a magistrate, testified that he accidently saw the murder, and that the man first arrested is the guilty one. He says he was going by the barn, and heard some one charging another with "stealing grain and hay" which was denied and reiterated; and apprehending violence, stepped into the barn just as the man felled the lad to the floor with a threshing flail, killing him instantly. He says the man's wife was also present, and that as soon as they saw him they came at him, and that it was only by a promise not to reveal what he had seen, that his life was spared. He soon sailed on a voyage, from which he had just returned, and hastened back to the scene of the murder, to unburden his conscience of the suppression, which he says has made him miserable during his whole absence. Steps were immediately taken for the arrest of the murderer, and he has been under examination in Middletown to-day."

The Western Hog Crop.

The Cincinnati Price Current, discussing the question of the hog crop, publishes the number of hogs returned in Kentucky by the Assessors, and the returns of thirty-one counties in Ohio. It then says:

"The former show an increase of twenty-nine per cent., as compared with last year, and the latter eighteen per cent. The returns in Kentucky are of hogs over six months old on the 10th of January, each year, and in Ohio of hogs over six months old on the 1st of April each year. In Kentucky we find over one million hogs over six months old on the 10th of January, 1857; and in Ohio, if the increase in the counties not yet heard from is the same as it is in those reported, there where 2,184,326 hogs over six months old on the first of last April. Indiana and Illinois had no doubt three millions of this age on the first of April, so that it will be seen the supply of the animals is ample. But then it is true, that hogs are being swept away by the 'hog cholera' at a frightful rate. This, however, is confined to a few localities, chiefly in the vicinity of distilleries, and we feel safe in saying that the whole number carried off this way for the year ending December 31st, 1857, will not exceed one hundred thousand; or, even if it should reach one hundred and fifty thousand, it could not diminish seriously the number brought to market. This will be obvious to any person upon the reflection that in Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, there were over six millions of hogs six months old and upwards on the 1st of last April. We think we may assume now, without fear of contradiction, that the supply of hogs is ample."

It says there will be a large increase in the number brought to market, and a "long hog crop."

☞ The Whig, published at Brownsville, Tenn., a well known Know Nothing journal, expresses the following opinion in relation to the banks:

"At this time last year, our banks had gold and exchange sufficient for business purposes, and our products brought high prices. Now our gold and exchange is gone, and prices are receding. The fact is beyond all controversy, our banking system is false, rotten—not based upon any sound basis of gold, silver, and exchange, but upon the credulity of our uninformed citizens! And this is known in the great marts of our country—hence our bank issues are at a discount from three to five per cent.
