Sr. Louis, April 19, 1858. Friday last was a day in the history of our city long to be remembered, and which, perhaps, in pageantry, never had a parallel west of the Mississippi; occasioned, as it was, in honoring a name that has for five and thirty years distinguished the State of Missouri, and the Great West, in the councils of the Nation-s name connected west, in the councils of the Nation—a name connected with those of the great Statesmen of the American Repub-lic, and which will go down to posterity alike honored by the State and country, and which will ever hold a high place in the most brilliant page of our modern history. This event was the death and funeral obsequies of the late

Col. THOMAS HART BENTON. Col. Benton was long a faithful and tried public servant He was once the idol of a great party in this State, and tha party took pride in honoring him as their leader and chief where he led the way they followed. His great voice wa a power of strength, and commanding, as he did, the rank and file of that powerful Democratic party of Missouri, l marched on through the different political conflicts to renown and victory, achieving some of the most gloriou triumphs ever recorded upon the pages of the political history of the American Union. His career in this State was truly brilliant, and his very presence in our mids caused his political enemies and opposers to scatter like chaff before the furious whirlwind. His voice was the trumpet that stirred the souls of those who followed his march. The lightning flash of his eye, and his commanding form and stately mien, brought forth a host around the gallant Benton, inspired by his eagle eye and lofty bearing. But that voice has been hushed, and that eye dimmed by the ruthless hand of death.

Col. Benton. like all political chieftains, had his enemies and opposers—with all of whom he made his peace ere he breathed his last-"I am comfortable and content." Upon this last sad occasion-following the earthly remains their final resting place—it was truly gratifying to see his old political enemies, and warm political and personal friends unite around the grave, each one for himself de SEC. 22. The remains of the deceased arrived here on Wednesday afternoon-as did also the dead body of little McDowell Jones, grand-son of Col. Benton, and were escorted to the esidence of Col. Brant, by the National Guards, Committee of Arrangements, Mayor, City Council, and a delegation of citizens. During Wednesday night a detachment of the military were stationed around the premises, and on Thurs. day the remains were removed to the Mercantile Library Hall, where an opportunity was offered to all who desired "last look" upon the face of the lifeless Statesman, which opportunity was embraced by between 20,000 and 25,000 of our citizens including young and old When we looked upon that old familiar countenance, we could see no great change—the remains were in a remarkable state of preser ation, notwithstanding it was the seventh day since life had left the body. The great Missourian lay in state until Friday, at 10 o'clock, when the the remains were put in a nearse and conveyed to the Second Presbyterian Church, accompanied by the military, city officers, relatives an friends of the family. The body of little McDowell Jones was also taken to the Church in a separate hearse from that bearing its grand-father. The Rev. Mr. Cowan officiated in the religious services. Before the discour was solemnly sung the hymn commencing-" Friend after friend departs."

The text was chosen in Phillippians, chapter 1, verse 21. "he words-" To DIE IS GAIN." The sermon was delivered in a most eloquent and in ressive manner. Whilst these services were going on within the church. without was all astir-the formation of the procession. About half past one o'clock, the religious services being concluded, the line was taken up, and began to move with slow and measured step towards the final resting place The solemn procession passed along the streets in the

The funeral cortege was forty minutes passing a given point—where we stationed ourself. This vast crowd consisted of every age, sex and condition, and every nationality that our population is composed of. Not only was Fifth street the great jam, but on all the streets through which the procession passed to the confines of the city. Many of the houses and public buildings were draped in mourning.

The Conference Committees have had several meetings and though publicity has not been given to the character of the report to be made by the majority, it is believed hat the proposition offered by Mr. English, on the part of the House, will be reported, Messrs. Mr. English gave notice that on to-morrow he would make a report from the Committee, and the vote will be taken upon the adoption without debate, The plan proposed by Mr. English is to admit "Kansas under the Lecompton Constitution," and the ordinance elative to the public lands is to be submitted to the people Should the people not accept the terms offered, then they nust remain in a territorial condition until the population shall have entitled them to one Representative in Congress The count has been made, and the summing up shows a najority of at least ten in the House for Lecompton.
