

THE LANCASTER INTELLIGENCER. PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY, AT NO. 8 NORTH DUKE STREET, BY GEO. SANDERSON.

THE LITTLE MAID. 'Twas in a balmy noon in Spring, When flowers were blooming fresh and fair...

And when the dew was on the leaves, And flowers bloomed there in silence. And that same sweet voice again...

THE HEART'S MISLEADERS; OR, THE STORY OF ROSALIE MAY. 'Oh! she had yet the task to learn How often woman's heart must learn...

There were four persons in the boat, two of them college friends of Lord Clarence's, who had accepted the invitation...

There was one gazing on her pityingly; she had detected the artifice by which Rosalie had endeavored to conceal her passion...

Before he was permitted to love and to admire the gentle virtues of Rosalie, he had expressed much admiration of his fair cousin Louis, who had been educated with...

Lady Louisa was astonished by what she heard. 'My dear girl!' she exclaimed, 'I should as soon think of marrying the Emperor of China as Lord Clarence Annersley! There are two great objections, I assure you...

'I have always, my dear Rosalie,' she said, 'found the best way of conquering our enemies is by confronting them. They tell me that the wild animals are subdued by looking them boldly in the face; and with all her faults, I do not believe that Lady Julia is in a wild state, or past repentance...

'The young hopes he had formed, the beautiful castles he had built in his imagination—the home of love which he had pictured, and of which Rosalie May was the presiding spirit—were broken and dispelled by the one word...

'What was left for Rosalie? She knew how much the birth and fortune of Lord Clarence Annersley raised him above her condition. She had herself agreed to be married to him, and she had been engaged to him for some time...

'The well-remembered tones as they fell, mollified by distance, upon the ear of Lord Clarence, served to feed his melancholy, and when the Lady Louisa Vallanville arrived, he was sought for to receive her, the servants found him at the casement, still looking upon the moonlit waters...

'She fled from that room—but not for sleep. No, it was only that the wild night step caused by distance, upon the ear of Lord Clarence, served to feed his melancholy...

'There was one gazing on her pityingly; she had detected the artifice by which Rosalie had endeavored to conceal her passion in the drawing-room—who had caught one look directed to Lord Clarence, whose look had told all—whose eye had never been from the self-devoted girl while she remained in the drawing-room...

'Rosalie started, and to her dismay, beheld before her the Lady Louisa Vallanville. 'Rosalie,' repeated the lady, taking one of her white hands within her own, and sitting down by her side...

OUR COMMON SCHOOLS. SKETCHES FROM MY NOTE BOOK. NO. IV.—SCHOOL GROUNDS.—FENCING, ETC. Districts and Number of School Houses Fenced.

No doubt some of my friends think that enough has been said about a subject so trivial as school grounds and surroundings. As we have a different opinion we will in a few more paragraphs...

This results more from side difficulties than any real unwillingness or even indifference on the part of Directors. When a young man wants to set up farming, or a mechanic to open a shop, it is well known that he is put in many straits...

'The future Lady Clarence Annersley!' replied his Lordship, and the sentence was echoed by the other gentlemen, as they tilted glasses for the ladies.

'The influence of these little things as they may seem, is very great. Character is easily formed and moulded in early life, and the language of trees and flowers, of neatness and taste, as spoken by nature, has no doubt, much implanted in the heart of childhood...

'I have a favor to beg of you,' he exclaimed, 'and although it is not a customary one, I would like to have you write me a few lines, and request all who love me to drink the health of the future Lady Clarence Annersley.'

'ABOUT ADVERTISING.—The Tribune lately had an excellent article on the subject of advertising, showing how that fortune has been made by advertising, and that there are thousands who have wealth within reach, if they but comprehended the use and importance of publicity...

'Paradise deserves the palm among the rural districts for attention to grounds. Seven out of her eight schools are enclosed, and several of them have large greenhouses, and most of them are planted, and in a few years will present a very handsome and attractive appearance...

article admonishes us to be brief. For some years we must look to teachers and patrons to do much of the work herein named, whilst directors are attending to what they consider "the weightier matters of the law."

Co-operation is what is needed—and every parent will think the more of his school every sacrifice he makes for it. Every teacher will be the more devoted in proportion to the labor he has spent and the success with which he has been rewarded...

While in Oregon last summer, I took occasion to inquire of the chief of who was mainly instrumental in getting up this war, to learn the particulars of the fate of our people who disappeared in the war of 1858, and of whom we had been able to learn nothing.

'The man who had murdered the people outside, they came towards the house, which was strongly built of heavy logs, and had a heavy door, which fastened with crossbars. When she saw them running towards the house she shut the door and dropped the bars to prevent their coming in.'

'I understand that the President Buchanan issued his proclamation to the people of Utah, but it has not until recently been made public. After briefly summing up the violations of law and order of which the Mormons have been guilty, and showing that they have driven the General Government to take active measures against them, the President continues...

'This rebellion is not merely a violation of our legal duty, it is without just cause, without reason, without excuse. You never made a complaint that was not listened to with patience. You never exhibited a real grievance that was not redressed as promptly as it could be. The laws and regulations enacted for your government by Congress have been equal and just, and their enforcement was manifestly necessary for your own welfare and happiness.'

'The President then declares that the warlike operations commenced will not cease until the Mormons become subservient to the law. He then proceeds to list the names of the various districts and the names of the persons who have been appointed to manage the same.
