"DO YOU THINK HE IS MARRIED?"

BY JOHN G. SAXE. Madam !- you are very pressing, And I can't decline the task; With the slightest gift of guessing You would hardly need to ask

Don't you see a hint of marriage In his sober-sided face? In his rather careless carriage

And extremely rapid pace If he's not committed treason Or some wicked action done, Can you see the faintest reason Why a bachelor should run?

Why should he be in a flurry?

But a loving wife to greet, Is a circumstance to hurry The most dignified of feet When afar the man has spied her, If the grateful, happy elf

Does not haste to be beside her. He must be beside himself It is but a trifle, may be-

But observe his practised tone, When he calms your stormy baby, Just as if it were his own

Do you think a certain meekness You have mentioned in his looks, Is a chronic optic weakness That has come of reading books

Did you ever see his vision Peering underneath a hood, Save enough for recognition, As a civil person should!

Could a capuchin be colder When he glances, as he must. At a finely rounded shoulder. Or a proudly swelling bust?

Madam !-think of every feature. Then deny it if you can-He's a fond, connubial creature, And a very married man!

THE FORGED PATENT.

The changes which the last twenty years have wrought in Illinois would be incredible to any one who had not witnessed them. At that time the settlements were few, and the spirit of enterprise which now pervades every corner of the State, had not awakened. The bluffs of the beautiful Illinois river had never sent back the echo of the steam engine. Without a market for their produce, the farmers confined their labors to the wants of their own families. Corn was nearly the only crop raised, and from the time it was "laid by," near the end of June, till "pulling time," in November, was a holiday, and the intervening period was passed in idleness, except Saturdays. On that day, duly as it arrived, the settlers listillery, amused themselves with shooting at a mark, trading nags, and too often, when the tin cup passed freely round, in fighting.

This is by no means a picture of all the settlements of that early period, but that it is graphically true of many, none of the oldest settlers will deny.

One Saturday afternoon, in the year 1819, a young man was seen approaching, with slow and weary steps, the house, or rather distillery of 'Squire Crosby, of Brent's Prairie, an obscure settlement on the Military Tract. As usual on that day a large collection of people were amusing at Crosby's, who owned the distillery in that region, and, being a magistrate, was regarded by the settlers as rich, and consequently a great man.

The youth, who now came up to the groupe, was apparently about twenty-one years of age, and of slender form, fair and delicate complexion, with the air of one accustomed to good society, and it was evident at a glance that he was not inured to the hardships of frontier life, nor labor of any kind. But his dress bore a strange contrast with his appearance and manners. He wore a hunting coat of the coarsest linsey woolsey, a common straw hat, and a pair of doeskin moccasins. A large pack completed his equipment.

Every one gazed with curiosity upon the new comer. In their eagerness to learn who he was, whence he came, and what his business was, the horse-swap was left unfinished, the rifle laid aside, and even the busy tin cup had a temporary respite.

The young man approached Squire Crosby, whom even a stranger could distinguish as the principal person among them, and anxiously inquired for a house where he could be accommodated, saying he was extremely ill, and felt all the symptoms of an approaching fever. Crosby eyed him closely and suspiciously for a moment, without uttering a word. Knaves and swindlers had recently been abroad, and the language of the youth betrayed that he was a "Yankee." a name at that time associated in the minds of the ignorant with every thing that is base. Mistaking the silence of Crosby for a fear of his inability to pay, the stranger smiled, and said, "I am not without money," and putting his hand to his pocket to give ocular proof of his assertion, he was horror-struck to find that his pocket book was gone. It contained every cent of his money, besides papers of great value. Without a farthing, without even a paper or letter to attest that his character was honorable, in a strange land, and sickness fast coming upon him, these thoughts | Though poor, with a good consience you nearly drove him to despair. 'Yes, I will,' cried a man among the crowd, 'yes, poor, sick stranger, I will my salvation.' Then in a lower tone he added, 'I know not whether you are deserving, but I do know that you are a fellow being, and in sickness and in want; and for the sake of Him who died for the guilty, if not for your own sake, will I be kind to you, poor young stranger.'

LANCASTER CITY, PA., TUESDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 2, 1858.

The man who stepped forth and proffered a home to the youth, in the hour of suffering, was Simon Davis, an elderly man, who resided near Crosby, and the latter was his deadly enemy. Uncle Simon, as he was called, never retaliated, and bore many persecutions of his vindictive neighbor without complaint. His family consisted of himself and daughter, his only child, an affectionate girl of seventeen.

The youth heard the offer of Mr. Davis, and heard no more, for overcome by his feelings and extreme illness, he sank insensible. He was conveyed to the house sensible. He was conveyed to the house of his benefactor, and a physician called.

His father, Charles Wilson, senior, was of his benefactor, and a physician called. to aid him. When the youth was laid upon her bed, and she heard him calling for his sister, Lucy Davis wept, and said to him, 'Poor young man, your sister is far distant, but I will be to you a sister.' --Well did this dark-eyed maiden keep her promise. Day and night she watched over

At length the crisis of the disorder arrived-the day that was to decide the question of life or death. Lucy bent over him with intense anxiety, watching every expression of his features, hardly daring to breathe, so fearful was she of awakening him from the only sound sleep he had enjoyed for nine long days and nights. At length he awoke and gazed into the face of Lucy Davis, and faintly inquired, Where am I? There was intelligence in that look. Youth and a good constitution had obtained the mastery. Lucy felt that he was spared, and bursting into a flood of tears, rushed from the room.

It was two weeks before he could sit up even for a ohort time. He had already acquainted them with his name and residence, but they had no curiosity to learn anything further, and forbade him giving his story until he became stronger. His name was Charles Wilson, and his paternal home Boston.

She ran to meet him, and was bestowing upon him a thousand endearing expressions of affection, when his haggard, wo-begone countenance startled her.

He uttered not a word, and went into his house and seated himself in silence.— It was in vain that she attempted to cheer him. After a long pause, during which there was a powerful struggle going on in his feelings, he rose and taking his daughter by the hand, led her into the room where William was seated.

'You must know all,' he said. 'I am ruined, I am a beggar.' In a few days I must quit this house; the farm that I have improved, and call my own.' He proceeded to state that a few days before, Crosby in a fit of ungovernable malice, ealled him a beggar, and told him he was now in his When Mr. Davis smiled at what he regarded as only an impotent threat, Crosby, to convince him, told him that the patent to his farm was a forged one, and land; had written to purchase it, and ex- application. pected a deed in a few days. On the day Charles became of age, he gave him a deed of the principal part of this land in Illinois, and insisted that he should go out and see it, and if he liked the country settle there. Wishing him to become identified with the people, he recommended his son to lay aside his broadcloth, and dress like a back-woodsman.

In compliance with this suggestion, the young man had assumed a rude and rustic dress so inappropriate to his appearance and more then, he passed on to collect the fare manners as to excite some suspicion that he had motives for concealing his real a seat a few paces off, a gentleman who had he had motives for concealing his real character.

On the morning of his son's departure, Mr. Wilson received a letter from a man himin Illinois who had frequently written. He wished to purchase a certain quarter section at government price which Mr. Wilson promised he should have on these terms, provided he forwarded a certificate from the judge of the circuit court that the land was worth no more. The letter just received inclosed the certificate in question. Mr. Wilson had given this tract to Charles, was absent from home, and Lucy engaged and putting the letter and certificate into about her household affairs, Wilson saw his hand, enjoined upon him to deed it to the writer, according to promise, upon his

A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

We question whether, in the history of following can easily be found. The story was related by an old and valued friend, now residing in the country, but whose early days were spent near the tragic adventure here recorded. We give the story.

It was about the year 1805 that I settled in Virginia, near the falls of Kanawa. The country at that time was an unbroken wilderness. But few settlements had been made by the whites then, and they were it, and barely remark that at the close, the Lucy the story of the forged deed. And so far apart as to render vain all hope of assistance in case of an attack from hostile Indians-numbers of whom still infested the neighborhood.

I lived there alone with my wife for several months unmolested, and, by dint of perseverance-being then young and hearty-had succeeded in making quite a large clearing in the forest, which I planted with corn, and which promised an abundant yield.

One morning after we had dispatched our humble meal, and I had just prepared to venture forth upon my regular routine of labor, my attention was arrested by the 'There,' said my wife, 'the cow is in the companions of the Indians I had killed .-To add to the danger and seeming hopelessness of my situation, I discovered that I had but one charge of powder left. I could but make one shot, and then if attacked by numbers, I should be entirely in their power. Determined to do the best with what I had, I poured out the last charge of powder, and put it into my musket, and then watched for the appearance of night, feeling confident of an attack. Night came at last—a beautiful moonlight night it was, too, and this favored greatly, as I would be able to observe the movements of the enemy as they approached my cabin. It was some two hours after nightfall, and as yet I had neither heard nor seen a sign of the Indians, when, suddenly, I was startled by the baying of my dog at the stable. I knew that the Indians were coming. The stable stood a little west of the cabin, and between the two was a patch of clear ground, upon which the light of the moon fell unobstructed. Judging from the noise at the stable, that they would advance from that direction, I posted myself at the port-hole on that side of the cabin. I had previously placed my wife on the cross-pole in the chimney, so that, in case our enemies effected an entrance into the cabin, she might climb out through the low chimney and effect her escape. For myself I entertained no hope; but, determined not to be taken alive, I resolved to sell my life dearly. With breathless anxiety I watched at the port-hole. At length I saw them emerge from the shadow of the stable and advance across the vacant ground toward cabin. One-two-three-great Heavens! six stalwart Indians, armed to the teeth, and urged on by the hope of revenge, and I alone to oppose them with one charge of powder. My case was desperate, indeed. With quick, yet stealthy step, in close single file they approached, and were already within a few yards of the house; then a slight change in the movement of the forward Indian changed portion of the left side of each was

The Indians had killed my cow, and that you may be assured was no trifling loss, yet, in my gratitude for my escape from the merciless savages, I would have been entirely willing to have made greater sacrifices. I was well provided—by means of arms and ammunition taken from the six Indians-in case of a second attack; but this, fortunately, proved to be my last adventure with the savages. Not one of the band had escaped to tell the tale and incite his brethren to avenge the death of his other comrades. 'Ah!' exclaimed the old man, while the tears gushed from his eyes at the memory of that eventful night, that was a glorious shot; the best I ever made.'

The hero of this adventure lived to see the rude wilderness, where he had pitched his lonely cabin, transformed into smiling fields and peopled by hardy and enterprising pale faces, among whom his last days were passed in peace and plenty, undisturbed by the presence of his old foes.
