WHEN SPRING COMES IN ON BALMY WINGS.

When Spring comes in on balmy wings,
From skies of deepest blue,
And waking earth around her things,
Her robes of verdant hue,
It is not then I quit the scene—
Forever close my eyes—
But stay and gaze on life pure sheen,
And nature's poetry.

Nor when sweet Summer shows her face,
All radiant with flowers,
And moon along with youthful grace,
Among the pasturing flocks,
Then I would wish to linger still,
Inhaling life's perfume,
For oh! how such the joyous will
Then trends the cold dark tomb.

Nor last of all, when Autumn glides
Along her fruitful and her fall,
And 'mid the falling yellow hides,
Her features from bright day,
That would wish to linger still,
And have them lay my head,
Where friends the tear spread mound should have,
Among the silent dead.

But when the last of Winter comes,
With biting blast and hail,
And every living thing seems dumb,
Beneath the heavy leaden veil,
Then I would place my feet at rest—
My last breath calmly draw—
Would raise my head with a triumphant breast,
And with blest spirits blend.

GLOWING OLD.

"Do you think of the days that are gone, Jennie,
As you pass your days in the town,
Do you wish that the morn would bring back the time,
When your heart and your step were so light,
I think of the days that are gone, Jennie,
And of all that I loved in them,
But the brightest that ever arose in me,
I have never wished back again."

"Do you think of the hopes that are gone, Jennie,
As ye sit by your fire at night,
Do you grieve that they are so faded,
Like buds withered by the frost,
I think of the hopes that are gone, Jennie,
And I mourn that they are so faded,
But they appear to be faded no more,
And I mourn not in falling, sweet."

"Do you think of the friends that are gone, Jennie,
As you sit by your fire at night,
Do you wish that they were again once more,
By the hearth that they made so bright,
I think of the friends that are gone, Jennie,
And I mourn that they are so bright,
But they appear to be bright no more,
And I mourn not in falling, sweet."

THIS IS POETRY.

Oh, if I see one earthly bliss,
More precious than the rest,
It is when with delight you kiss a pretty girl,
Who sends a certain individual out of the room,
On the important errand of seeing what hour is indicated by the hand of the family time-piece down stairs.
Certain individual being her brother.
While musing thus, one summer eve,
As by the fire one side I sat,
The time was near at hand to leave, so stealing my
Do you wish that they were again once more,
By the hearth that they made so bright,
I think of the friends that are gone, Jennie,
And I mourn that they are so bright,
But they appear to be bright no more,
And I mourn not in falling, sweet."

LOVE IN THE CLOUDS.

"And this is the fellow that wants to marry my daughter! A pretty fool I should be to give Annie to a coward like that!" So shouted honest Master Joss, the sacristan of Vienna, as he stood in the public room of the "Adam and Eve" inn and looked after the angry retreating figure of Master Otakar, the head mason.

As he spoke, an honest young gardener, named Gabriel, entered, and for a moment the youth's handsome face flushed high, as he thought the sacristan's words were directed at him. For it was the old, old story. Gabriel and Annie had played together and loved each other before they knew the meaning of the word love, and when a few months before, they had found themselves betrothed, and were to be married, it was Annie's father, who had rejected him with scorn. The young gardener had little to offer besides an honest heart and a pair of industrious hands, while Master Otakar, the mason, had both houses and money. To him, then, sorely grieved, and poor Gabriel kept away from the sacristan's pleasant countenance, manfully endeavoring to root out his love while exterminating the weeds in his garden. But somehow it happened that, although the docks and thistles withered and died, that other pertentious plant, clinging and twining like wild convolvulus, grew and flourished, nurtured, perchance, by an occasional glimpse of sweet Annie's pale cheek and drooping form.

So matters stood, when one day, as Gabriel was passing through a crowded street, a neighbor hailed him:

"Great news, my boy! glorious news! Our Leopold has been chosen Emperor at Frankfort. Long live the House of Austria! He is to make his triumphant entry here in a day or two. Come with me to the Adam and Eve, and we will drink his health and cheer all about it!"

In spite of his dejection, Gabriel would have been no true son of Vienna if he had refused this invitation; and waving his cap in sympathy with his comrade's enthusiasm, he hastened with him to the inn.

There, as they were entering, they met the sacristan did not observe Gabriel, and Master Joss was his, and dancing on a flat and over courteous refusal. The old man made a hasty retreat; words ran high, and the parting volley, leveled at the retreating mason, we have already reported.

"Would you, dear Master Joss, would you indeed do so? Then, with the help of Providence, I'll wave the banner for you as long as you please from the top of St. Stephen's tower."

"You, Gabriel, said the old man, looking at him as kindly as he was wont to do in former days. "My poor boy! you never could do it; you a gardener, who never had any practice in climbing."

"Ah, now you want to draw back from your word!" exclaimed the youth, reddening. "My head is steady enough, and if my heart is heavy it is you that made it so. Never mind, Master Joss. Only promise me, on the word of an honest man, that you'll not interfere any more with Annie's free choice; and you may depend upon seeing the banner of our Emperor, whom may Heaven long preserve, waving gloriously on the old pinnacle."

"I will, my brave lad; I do promise, in the presence of these honest folks that Annie shall be yours!"

"One thing I have to ask you," said the young man, "that you will keep this matter a secret from Annie. She'd never consent; she'd say I was tempting Providence; and who knows whether the thought of her displeasure might not make my head turn giddy just when I want to be the most firm and collected."

"But when they did not come, and the pitiless darkness thickened around him, so that he could not see his hand, his death anguish grew to the pitch of insanity."

"God!" he cried, "the Emperor will suffer such barbarity. Noble Leopold, help! One word from you would save me!"

"Because the sight of her pale face and weeping eyes troubled me; because I was vexed with her; because to tell the truth I was vexed with myself. Gabriel, I was a hard-hearted old fool, I see it now. And I was very near destroying the happiness of my only remaining child; for my poor boy Arnold, your friend and school-fellow, Gabriel, has been for many years in foreign parts, and we don't know what has become of him. But now, please God, Annie at least will be happy, and you shall marry her as soon after the day of procession as you and she may please. There's my hand on it."

"There was not a happier man that evening within the precincts of Vienna, than Gabriel the gardener, although he well knew that he was attempting a most perilous enterprise, and one as likely as not to result in his death. He made all necessary arrangements in case of that event, especially in reference to the comfort of an only sister, who lived with him, and whose he was careful to keep in ignorance of his intended venture. Thus done, he resigned himself to dream all night of tumbling from terrific heights, and all day of his approaching happiness. Meanwhile Otakar swallowed his chagrin as best he might, and kept aloof from Master Joss, but he might have seen holding frequent and secret communications with Lawrence, a man who assisted the sacristan in the care of the church.

The day of the young Emperor's triumphal entry arrived. He was not expected to reach Vienna before evening; and at the appointed hour, the sacristan, in the name of the House of Austria, gorgeously embroidered, said: "Now, my boy, up in God's name! Follow Lawrence, he will guide you safely to the top of the spire, and afterwards assist you in coming down."

"Five hundred and fifty steps to the top of the tower! Mere child's play—the young gardener flew up them with a joyous step. Then came two hundred wooden steps over the clock tower and belfry; then five steep ladders up the narrow pinnacles. A few more bold steps and, in an hour of peril, then triumph, reached the crest's blessing and the joyful cry, before the altar. Ah, how heavy was the banner to drag upwards—how dark the straight, stony shaft! Hold! there is the trap-door. Lawrence, and the assistant who accompanied him, pushed Gabriel through."

"That's it!" cried Lawrence; "you'll see the iron steps and the clamps to hold us by outside—only keep your head steady. When 'tis your time to come down, hail us, and we'll throw you a rope ladder, with hooks. 'Arrow!' and as he said these words, Gabriel had passed through the trap-door, and with feet and hands clinging to the slender iron projections, felt himself hanging over a tremendous precipice, while the cold evening breeze ruffled his hair. He had still, burdened as he was with the banner, to steady himself on a part of the spire sculptured in the similitude of a rose, and then, after two or three daring steps still higher, to bestride the very pinnacle and wave his gay gold flag."

"May God be merciful to me!" sighed the poor lad, as glancing downward to the busy streets, lying so far beneath, the whole extent of his danger flashed upon him. He felt so lonely, so utterly forsaken in that desert of the upper air, and the cruel wind strove with him, and struggled to wrest the heavy banner from his hand. "Annie, Annie, 'tis for thee!" he murmured, and the sound of that sweet name nerved him to endurance. He wound his left arm firmly around the iron bar which supported the golden staff, surmounted by a crescent, that served as a weathercock, and with the right waved the flag, which flapped and rustled like the wing of some mighty bird of prey. The sky—how near it seemed—grew dark above his head, and the lights and bonfires glowed upwards from the great city below. But the cries of rejoicing came faintly on his ear, until one long continued shout mingled with sounds of drums and trumpets announced the approach of Leopold.

"Huzza! huzza! long live the Emperor!" shouted Gabriel, and waved his banner proudly. But the deepening twilight and the dizzy height rendering him unseen and unheard by the busy crowd below.

The deep voice of the cathedral clock tolled the hour.

"Now my task is ended," said Gabriel, drawing a sigh of relief, and shivering in the chilling breeze. "Now I have only to get down and give the signal."

More heedfully and slowly than he had ascended, he began his descent. Only once he looked upward to the golden staff and crescent, now beginning to look colorless against the dark sky.

"Ha!" said he, "doesn't it look now as if that heathenish Turk of a crescent were nodding and wishing me an evil good night? Be quiet, Mohammed!"

A few courageous steps landed him once more amid the petals of the gigantic cup-plect, and all three, rushing through the cathedral gate, darted up the stairs, the sacristan, in the dread excitement of the moment, moving as swiftly as his young companions.

Albert, knowing the track of the trap-door, went through it first.

"Call out to him, lad!" exclaimed Master Joss.

A breathless pause.

"I hear nothing stirring," said Albert, "nor can I see anything from this. I'll climb over the rose."

Bravely did he surmount the perilous projection; and after a few moments of intense anxiety, he reappeared at the trap-door.

"There certainly is a figure standing on the rose, but 'tisn't Gabriel; 'tis a ghost!"

"A ghost! you dreaming dunderhead," shouted Arnold. "Let me up." And he began to climb with the agility of a cat.

Presently he called out: "Come on, come on, as far as you can. I have him, thank God. But quick; time is precious. Speedily they gave him aid; and at length a half unconscious figure still wrapped in the banner, was brought down in safety."

"They bore him into the 'Adam and Eve,' laid him in a warm bed, and poured by degrees a little wine down his throat. Under this treatment, he soon recovered his consciousness and began to thank his deliverers. Suddenly his eye fell on a mirror hanging on the wall opposite the bed and he exclaimed:

"Wipe the hoar frost off my hair, and I would dust off my cheeks!"

In truth, his curled locks were white, his rosy cheeks yellow and wrinkled, and his bright eyes dim and sunken; but neither hoar frost or dust was there to wipe away—that one night of horror had added forty years to his age!

"That young mother is now in the Utica Lunatic Asylum. From the hour her boy was killed never had left its throne. He stopped and wiped the tears from his eyes, and said: 'You may think it weak of me to shed tears, but I cannot help it.' 'No,' I replied, 'but think it noble; and, sir, would to God every man had a heart as large as yours.'"

I have often thought since how few are those who give one passing thought to the man of strong nerve and a stout arm who guides them through darkness and storms, with the speed of the wind, safely to their journey's end. They do not, for a moment, turn their attention to the iron monster that is dragging them forward, with fearful velocity, to meet friends or relatives. They do not realize that the man who guides the heavy monster holds all their precious lives at his command, and that the least negligence upon his part would cause sorrow and mourning in a thousand homes that are now waiting the return of the absent loved ones.
