THE HAUNTED BACHELOR.

BY RICHARD BROUGH I sit in a haunted chamber,
("Tis one of a set of three,)
In an old and gloomy Temple,
Facing a huge plane-tree.
A seedy old tree, and dismal,
Hung over with worsted balls,
That bob at my darkened window
Like tufts upon funeral palls.

'Tis a black look-out on all sides, Wherever the gaze is met;
Wherever the gaze is met;
The fountain down in the court-yard
Spirts with a ghost-like jet.
There are chimney-sweeping sparrows,
With tails not worth their salt,
The very black wine I am drinking
Was fetched from a neighboring vault!

At my cheerless chimney corner, All grimy with years and smoke,
I try—with an ardent spirit—
To kindle a flame from Coke; Or, by polishing up my Blackstone, To catch an enlivening spark ning spark,

In this gruesome habitation am haunted night and day By a tempting female vision; It may be a witch or fay.
I'm a terrible dunce at Elt-lore And dare not assign her class,
But I'm sure she isn't a mermaid,
For she never looks in the glass.

And her dark hair never wants combing, 'Tis glossy as ebon sheen, Encased in a snug silk bonnet, Not coral nor seawood green. She can't be a moaning Banshee Her voice is too soft to how! ! As she's eating my living heart out. She can't be a death-fed Ghoul.

I've heard about Gnomes and Kobbolds Who tompt me under the earth,
With promise of gold and jewels,
Of treasure and treasure's worth.
Bribes, my familiar syren
No'er breathes a word about: owns she has not a farthing.

But can live upon love, without. But can live upon tove, without.

There's a drudging kind of Goblin
I have read of in Milton's page,
Who will spread you a splendid breakfast
For a very modest wage.
One morn when the milk was curdled,
And the coffee a witch's broth—
She came to my ear and whispered,
"You should let me lay your cloth!"

Then I thought that she might be kindred Then I thought that sne might be kindle To that dairyman rough and grim;
But I saw that the fair sprite shuddered To find herself classed with him.
"I would drudge and toil to serve you,"
And her eyes with pearl-drops stream (And her eyes with pearl-drops stre But not for a poor night's lodging, Or a paltry bowl of cream!"

One morn I awoke and saw her Sitting beside my bed, Mending my old worn slippers With worsted of groot and re-With worsted of green and red. the!" I cried, "I have caught you, You Irish Leprehaun! Mending the holes in a poor man's shoes''-

I clutched, and the shape was gone. Another awakening vision,
We had watched in the night too deep;
I had fallen a-bed all weary,
My clothes in a shapeless heap;
Rooks upon chair and sofa;

Books upon chair and sofa; Bottles and pipes on floor; Never a key in padlock; Never a bolt on door. Feverish, tossing, groaning, I lay, till a magic balm Bathed like a dew my forehead:

There was my ruffled chamber,
Orderly, prim as new,
As the fair sprite vanished and said with a smile,

She will win me away from this gloomy life, Away from this reckless self. vill follow where'er she beckons-Through fire, o'er land or sea

For never was fairy tempter Like the spirit that beckons me!

A JAPAN BELLE. A recent East Indian traveler thus

I saw a young girl standing, fan in hand, at an open door, reading. She was simply clad in a loose crape half-petticoat, half dressing-gown sort of dress, reaching as far down as the ankles, and bound by a sash of yellow silk around the waist. Her feet, which were small and beautifully formed, rested on the common high straw sandals of the country. Over this dress, which left the bosom partly uncovered, she wore a light cream-colored open jacket, of a muslin texture, with wide sleeves extending a little below the elbow; her soft black hair was beautifully drawn back from off the forehead, and bound in a peculiar cluster at the back of the head.

Assessor: (North ward) James Barber, po; Michael Clepper, 58. (South Ward) James Barber, 128; Michael Clepper, 82.

Constable: (North Ward) Samuel Hollingswhere it was held by two gold pins, one of great length, and with a scorpion-like device attached to it, and which moved to and fro with every motion of its wearer. Her complexion was bright and pale, much more so than the Chinese; her features animated and expressive, and her teeth white, and as finely formed as her entire figure. By the latter I saw that she was unmarried-the invariable Japanese custom being, that on the marriage of every female the teeth are dyed black, and, in some cases, the eyebrows shaven off.

I halted nearly in front of where she stood; she did not look "piqued," and turn away as the fair damsels of my own country would have likely done; but she favored me with a steady gaze, and smiled, though I could scarce detect the movement of a feature, while her eyes, like souls of eloquence, glowed in fascinating beauty. She was reading a book; I saluted her with a low bow; she returned the compliment by a somewhat similar movement. Observing my curiosity to see the book which she held, she handed it to me. It was thick, and of nearly the quarto size; and letter press was mixed with numerous wood-cuts—a common circumstance in Japan, as I subsequently ascertained. where nearly every book published abounds with numerous illustrations. In weight the book was exceedingly light, and the cover-was of a very thick, colored paper, highly ornamented, the external picture being that of a crucifixion; the paper was printed on one side only, and left uncut, so that the printed sides were alone presented to the eye. The work, one of an ordinary kind, was of excellent typography. Of its ordinary merits the young lady might have formed an opinion; but being anything but a Japanese, I could do no such pleasant thing."

A boy being praised for his quickness of reply, a gentleman observed—
"When children are so very keen, they generally become stupid as they advance in years." The lad immediately replied What a very keen boy you must have

Why Tom, my dear fellow, how old you look." M. Dare say, for the fact is, I never was so old before in my life."
