THE CRUSADER'S RETURN. "Who'll keep for me my ladye dear?" The bold Crusader ories; "Intrust thy ladye dear to me," His brother false replies.

"Trust her to me; in secret bower She'll with my damsels stay, Or sit in hall with lordly dames, And fare as well as they.

Few days had pass'd, and gay to view Was Faoute's court-yard fair, All fill'd with mounted Red-Cross Knights, Whose banners stream'd in air.

Ere far had rode that castle's lord, His sparse had learn'd to weep! "Doff those proud robes for hodden gray; Go forth! and tend my sheep!"

"Oh ! brother dear, the sheep to tend, Alas! I know not how." If to tend sheep thou'st never learn'd, My lance shall teach thee now!"

Seven live-long years beside her sheep, The sad one wept in vain; At seven years' end, forget to weep, And sweetly sung again

As with her songs the mountains rung, A knight came riding near, And to his page the reins he flung, Cries, "Whose that voice I hear ?-

"That silver voice ! seven years have past, (Seven weary years, I trow,) Since in mine ears it sounded last, Even as I hear it now !

"Good-morrow to thee, mountain maid ! Thy carol sounds so gay, Methinks thou hast, to sing so clear, Breakfasted well to-day !"

"Fared well I have-to God be thanks For what he gave and took-Though on a crust I broke my fast, And dipped it in the brook."

"Tell me, fair damsel ! oan I lodge At yonder lordly hall?" "Oh, yes! you'll find fair lodging there, Your steed a knightly stall;

"A couch of down will wait your rest. Such as I once could share, Ere, banish'd with the flocks to dwell, I shared the watch-dog's lair?''

"And where, my child, then, is your spouse? Your wedding-ring I see." "My spouse, my lord, is at the wars---He'd fair long locks like thee!"

"If long and fair his locks like mine,

Might we not be the same?" "Oh, yes! you are my love, my lord, And I Faoute's dame!" "Leave thou the flocks! my halls to read

With fiery haste I burn !--Brother! all hail ! my lady's weal From you I long to learn ?''

"Still fair as brave '-Rest, brother, rest, Your ladye fair has gone "To Quimper, to a wedding feast; But she'll be here anon."

"Thou liest, wretch! thy sheep to feed, On countains lone and bare, Thou sent'st my dame, in servile weed; Lo! she stands sobbing there!

"Go! brother cursed, and hide thy shame Not one more lying word ! Wer't not our parents' hallow'd hearth, Thy blood had stain'd my sword !''

THE THRONE OF BLISS. Three ledies stopped at three wild paths On their way to the Throne of Bliss, And Wit came by With a piercing eye, And told them to go by his : But Love and Pleasure followed soon, To policy the method followed soon,

To relieve the maiden's cares,

And each did say The shortest way To the Throne of Bliss was their's. The first went on the brighter path, And found it strewed with flowers,

With verses writ On each by Wit,

That kept her back for hours : The second followed Pleasure's track, And saw a thousand sweets, So thought it fair To linger there, And taste the fairy treats.

But she who trod o'er Cupid's path,

Among its horid of the Cultur pain, Among its horid store, Found every pace, O'er Love's sweet place, More blissful than before : For glad young voices called her on, "Till lured by this On the Throne of Bliss
