Inches in eize, contains thirty nine figures, and is beyond comparison the finest work of the kind over offered as a premium in this country. 'The engraving of Frith's picture of Merry-Making' in the Oiden Time, represents the humors of an kinglish holi-day in the county in those good old times when the men wore cocked-hats and knee breeches, and the women stays and hoogs—a costume not essentially differing from the corset and erinoline of the yresent day. Atmost in the centre of the picture and a little to the background is a country dance on the green, with a hard-featured fiddler perched on a high seet, and another musician in a tie-wig standing by him, playing with all their might. On the right two bouncing girls are gally pulling toward the dance a gray-haired man, who seems valing to remonstrate that his 'dancing days are over,' while a waggish little child pushes him forward from behind, greatly to the amsoment of his spouse, who is still sitting at the testable, from which he has been dragged. On the left, under a magnifi-cent preasing cak, sitt he squire and his wife, whom a country man with his hat off is respectfully inviting to take part in the dance. To the left of the 'squire is a young couple on the grass, to whom a gippy with an infant on her shoulder is tailing their fortune. Over the aboulders of the scouple is a landscape of gnotie slopes and copses. The picture has the expression of gavety through-out and the engraving is splendidly executed. It is fresh from the burn of Hous, not having yet been published in England.
