"While we were riding forward grave events were coouring in the highest regions of the army.—
There exists in the American army, as in the English, a Commander in-Uner, who exercises over the head of all the generals a supreme authority, regulates the distribution of the troops and directs military operations. These functions, which have been greatly curtailed in the British army since the Crimean war, were still exercised with all their vigor in America. From the aged General Scott, who had long honorably discharged them, they had passed long honorably discharged them, they had passed to treneral factlellan. We learned, on reaching Fairtax, that they had been taken away from him. It is easy to understand the diminution of torce and the restrictions upon his usefulness thus inflicted upon the General-in-chief by a blow in the rear at the very outset of his campaign.

pon the General-in-chief by a blow in the rear at is very outset of his campaign.

"Yet this was but a part of the mischief done in. McCieilan had long known, better than any-dy else, the real strength of the rebels at Manussa and Centreville. He was perfectly familiar with a continuous of the version of the winder of the repels at the left in the second of the version of the ve the existence of the wooden cannon by which it has been pretended that he was kept in awe for six months. But he also knew that till the month of April the roads of Virginia are in such a state that wagons and artillery can only be moved over them by constructing plank roads, a tedious operation, during which the enemy, holding the railways, could either retreat, as he was then actually doing, or move for a blow upon some other point. In any event, had McClellan attacked and carried Centreville, pursuit was impossible and victory would have been barren of results. A single bridge burned would have saved Johnston's whole aimy. Such are the vast advantages of a railway for a retreating army—advantages which do not exist for the army which pursues it. April the roads of Virginia are in such a state that a grave check, and unable to cover both positions at once, Johnston threw his whole force before the lat-

"For the Army of the Potemac this was a misfor-"For the Army of the Potomac this was a misfortune. Its movement was unmasked before it had been made. Part of its transports were still frozen up in the Hudson. Such being the state of affairs, was it proper to execute as rapidly as possibly the movement upon Richmond by water, or to march upon Richmond by land? Such was the grave question to be settled by the young general in a miserable room of an abandoned house at Fairfax, within twenty-four hours. And it was at this moment that the news of his removal as general-in-chef reached the news of his removal as general-in-chief reached him; the news, that is, that he could no longer count upon the co-operation of the other armies of the Union, and that the troops under his own orders the Union, and that the troops under his own orders were to be divided into four grand corps under four separate chiefs named in order of rank, a change which would throw hut subaltern positions some young generals of divisions who had his personal confidence. It was easy to see that here was matter enough to cust a cloud upon the firmest mind. But the general's resolution was promptly taken.

"To follow the confederates by land to Kichmond at this season of the year was a material intensity.

"To follow the confederates by land to Richmond at this season of the year was a material impossibility. At incident had just proved this to be so. General Sconeman, with a flying column, had been sent in pursuit of the enemy. This column came up with the enemy on the Kappinannock, along the railway to Gordonsville, and had two engagements with him of no great importance. Then came the rain. The fords were swellen, the bridges or ried away, the water-courses could no longer be passed by swimming—they were torrents. Stomeman's column began to suffer for want of provisions, and its situation was perifous. In order to communicate with the army, Stoneman had to send two of McClellan's aides-de-camp, who had accompanied him, lan's aides-de-camp, who had accompanied him, across a river on a raft of logs tied together with across a river on a raft of logs tied together with ropes.

"Such was the country before the army. Furthermore, the enemy was burning and breaking up all the bridges. Now with the wauts of the American soldier and the usual extravagance of his rations, and with the necessity of transporting everthing through a country where nothing is to be found, and where the least storm makes the roads impassable, no army can live unless it supports its march upon a navigable water-course or a railway. In Europe our military administration assumes that the transportation service of an army of one hundred thousand men can only provision that army for a three days' march from its base of operations. In America this limit must be reduced to a single day. I need only limit must be reduced to a single day. I need only add that upon the roads to Richmond there were vialucts which would have required six weeks to reconstruct.

"This land march was therefore abandoned, and "This land march was therefore abandoned, and we came back to the movement by water. But this operation also was no longer what it had been when McCleilan had conceived it. The revelation of his plans to the enemy had allowed the latter to take his precautions. The evacuation of Manassas had preceded instead of following the opening of the Union campaign. The movement by water could no longer be a surprise. Unfortunately it was also to lose the advantages of a rapid execution.

"A few days had been half lost in a useless pursuit of the enemy, while the transports were assemb-suit of the enemy, while the transports were assembling at Alexandria. At last they were assembled and the order came to embark. But here a new misand the order came to embark. But here a new mis-understanding awaited the General. He had been promised transports which could convey 50,000 men at a time. He found vessels hardly equal to the con-veyance of half that number. Instead of moving at once, as McClellan had intended, a whole army with its equipment. at once, as Mouleilan had intended, a whole army with its equipage, a number of trips had to be made. The embarkation began March 17. The force consisted of 11 divisions of infantry 8,000 to 10,000 strong. 1 division of regulars (infantry and cavalry)

The total effective force may have been 120,000 men. At the moment of departure a whole division was detached to form, we know not why, an independent command, under General Fremont, in the mountains of Virginia. We shall see the Potomac army successively undergo other not inexplicable diminutions. But we anticipate.
"A fortnight was required to move the army to Fortress Monroe. This point was chosen because the apparition of the Merrimac, and her tremendous exhibition of her strength, had made it impossible to regard the United States navy as absolutely mistress of the waters of Virginia." and the United States navy as absolutely mis-of the waters of Virginia." The Prince here proceeds to a graphic account of the battles between the Merrimac and our navv.

the battles between the Merrimac and our navy, which we necessarily omit at this time. He well paints the extent of the disaster which the Merrimac paints the extent of the disaster which the Merrimac might have worked had she swept down among the transports—those "floating hives of men"—ere the disemburkation had been completed, and he ascribes her inaction to the fact that by lying at Norfolk she paralyzed the naval forces intended to operate in the attack on Yorktown, and at the same time deprived McClellan of the advantages of holding the James river in his operations against Richmond.

The Prince then discusses the events of the campaign, the resistance at Yorktown to gain time to entrench Richmond. and the battle of Williamsburg. He then continues his criticism:

He then continues his criticism:

"At all events, the campaign so far, if not bril-liant, had produced important results. Yorktown and Norfolk had been abundoned and the Merrimac destroyed. * * McClellan had driven the oneupon his capital, and brought him to the

sue of a decisive battle. "I know that such a battle ought to have been won and was not won. But here the responsibility is far from belonging to the chief or to his army. Who were the men who driving them into an untimely campaign had so revealed to the enemy operations not yet ripe for execution? Was McClelian responsible for that want of unity in the ends and in the action of the flower than the mention. responsible for that want of unity in the ends and in the action of the dovernment which had trammelled the movements of the army since he had been deprived of the chief command and supreme direction of the armies? Was McClellan responsible for the systematic diminution of his forces, which, in the face of the agglomeration of the forces of the enemy, had successively deprived him, since the campaign had opened, of the division of Blenker, and of two-thirds of McDowell's corps, without sending him one solltary man to fill up the gaps made by sickness and by the cannon? In spite of all these obstacles, he had reached the walls of Richmond, but he had no longer the means of striking the great blow which no longer the means of striking the great blow white probably would have ended the war. In a host probably would have ended the war. In a hostile country, what appears a simple reconnoissance may often prove a serious and general attack. There a large force is needed to guard against surprises, and a still larger force to secure lines of communication which cannot be broken without danger. * * * Reinforcements were needed. Whence should they come? Gen. Wool, from Norfolk, Burnside, from North Carolina, might send some men, butvery few, while around Washington more than eighty thousand were collected. Of these about one-half were making head against the partisan Jackson in the Valley of the Shenandoah. The rest were collected under McDowell at Fredericksburg, sixty miles to the north of Richmond. They had rebuilt the rail-way bridge over the Rappahannock, and in three or four days they might have joined the army of McClellan. They covered nothing at Fredericksburg, and were so notoriously unseless to the Union cause that in the rebel journals they were spoken of as the effith wheel of the coach. and werd so notoriously unseless to the Union cause that in the robel journals they were spoken of as the fifth wheel of the coach.' It was known that McDowell desired ardently to give the lie to these railleries by bringing at the decisive moment his assistance to the cause of the Union. Accordingly McDoellan had no sconer arrived before Richmond than he undertook to discover what he had to hope for on this side. No official advice, either from Washington or from Fredericksburg, had informed him of MnDowell's presence at that point, only sixty miles distant, but rumor and probability agreed so wellming the placing him there, that the general-in-chief resolved was then at sea.

with him. On the night of the 26th he sent forward Gen. Porter's division with a tew squadrous of cavalry, in a furious storm, to Hanover Court House. a village about twenty miles north of Bichmond, where the railway to Fredericksburg crosses the Paunitey. The troops of Porter moved rapidly, and about midduy on the 27th came upon the hostile division of Branch, at Hanovor Court House. This they assailed with vigor, dispersed it, and took one of its guns. Assailed in their turn by rebel troops who had suffered them to pass by the woods in which they lay hidden, the Unionists turned on their new memics, and scattered them also. This brilliant affair cost the Unionists 400 men, and left General Porter in possession of a cannon, of 500 prisoners, and of two bridges, one on the Fredericksburg and one on the Virginia Central road. The advanced in an orchard in the bivounce of Porter, and the possession of Richmond certain! Alas! this effort was not made. I cannot recall those fatal moments without a real sinking of the heart. advantages of a railway for a retreating army—advantages which do not exist for the army which pur sues it.

"We have the right, we think, to say that McClelian never intended to advance upon Centreville. His long determined purpose was to make Washington sate by means of a strong garrison, and then-to use the great navigable waters and immense naval resources of the North to transport the army by sea to a point near kitchmond. For weeks, perhaps for mouths, this plan had been secretly mainting. Secrecy as well as promptness, it will be understood was indispensable here to success. To keep the secret, it had been necessary to confide it to few persons, and hence had arisen the long iii feeling toward the uncommunicative general.

"Be this as: it may, as the day of action drew mear, those who suspected the General's project, and were angry at not being informed of it; those whom his promotion had excited to envy; his political enemies, (who is without them in America?)—in short all those beneath or beside him who wished him ill, broke out into a chorus of accusations of slowness, inaction, incapacity. McClellan, with a particular these accusations, and made no reply. He satisfied himself with pursuing his preparations in laborious silence. But the moment came in which, notwith standing the loyal support given him by the President, that functionary could no longer resist the tempest. A council of war of all the division Generals was held; a plan of campaign, not that of Alic Cleilan, was proposed and discussed. McCleilan was then forced to explain his projects, and the next day they were known to the enemy. Informed, no doubt, by one of those female spies who keep up his communications into the domestic circles of the Union enemy, Johnston evacuated Manassas at once. Thus was a skillful mancouvre. Incapable of assuming the offensive, threatened with the attack either a contreville, where decince would be useless it successful, or at Richmond, the loss of which would be a grave check; and unable to ever both posit rest for a moment, and sit down in the verandsh of a country house on the road. The mistrees of the house came up and complained that the soldiers were eating her cherries. With a smile the General rose himself and went out to stop the pillagers."

For the last effort, at Malyern Hill, General McClellan's preparations receive the himbest pressure.

For the last effort, at Malvern Hill, General McClellan's preparations receive the highest praise. This battle, says the Prince, was "for the confederates an useless butchery. The federal successes was due to two causes—first. to the fortunate foresight of the general, who, in spite of numerous natural obstacles to the passage of artillery, had spared nothing to bring his on, and next to the firmness of his troops. Men do not make such a campaign, and go through such experience as they had endured, without coming out more or less formed to war. If their primitive organization had been better, the survivors of this rude campaign, I do not fear to assert, might be regarded as the equals of the best soldiers in the world."

It is for achieving this result with the troops confided to his care, we presume, that the general whose persistent efforts to do his duty to his country, through all the intrigues and against all the obstacles upon which the Prince de Joinville's calm and imartial statement throws so clear and convincing partial statement throws so clear and convincing a light, has been ordered to relinquish the command of the one army which stands to-day between the ambition of Jefferson Davis and the honor of the National Government. The Prince de Joinville winds up his sketch of the campaign with a few pages of well-considered and sensible comments upon the political aspects of the struggle in which he had taken so frank a part. That his sympathies are wholly with the North and the Union is plain, and these Symuthies must have grown up, we heg the these sympathies must have grown up, we beg the critics of McClotlan to observe, in his daily intercourse with that general.

Herrible Accident.-The Waynesburg Messenger of the 12th inst. gives a description of a horrible accident which occurred in that county on the 4th inst. Some nine persons, on the night in question, started from the res idence of Christopher Johns, near Newtown, Whitelev township, for the purpose of taking a coon hunt. They had not proceeded far before a coon was treed. The boys began, by turns, to chop the tree. A part, as usual, were detailed to hold the dogs. Some, too, were mere lookers-on. All were standing diametrically opposite from the direction they supposed the tree would fall. At length the tree at which they were chopping swayed and fell, carrying with it for some distance, a dead poplar that stood near; when, becoming detached in its rehound it broke off pear the ground; and, horrible to relate, it caught three of the boys beneath it, mangling them in a dreadful manner, killing Franklin Johns son of Christopher Johns) instantly, mortal wounding William Chalfant, (son of Elijah Chalfant,) so that he died while being carried to the nearest house, and injuring Marion Calvert, (son of Marion Calvert,) so that little or no hope of a speedy recovery is entertained.

ed. At length the excitement became so intense that one fervent bystander actually paid the owner $4 for the privlage of digging three hours. He was rewarded by the disco ery of four coppers! DISTRESSING CASUALTY -On Friday morn-District Casualty — On Friday mornof York county, came to their death under the following painful circumstances: It appears that sometime during the forenoon of that day, they came to the house for a mattock to dig out a rabbit that had taken shelter from the doz pureuing it under the roots of a large tree that had been felled by a late storm.
The trunk of the tree was cut off the usual distance from the roots, leaving an ordinary length stump, but very heavy, as the tree had been a large one. The three lads, the oldest about 15 or 16 years of age, commenced to dig under the upturned roots, to which was attached a large quantity of soil, and, from some cause or other, the whole mass turned over to its former place, burying the unfortunate children alives to to moon the father became uneasy and was in pursuit of them.

As he came to the scene of disaster, he saw the faithful dog lying near; and the uprighted stump, together with the demonstrations of the animal, at once made him realize the sad fate of his only three sons, as he discovered one of their feet projecting from the ground.

They were all dead to the father becollect the same.

Our Republican readers may like the crack of Col. Forney's whip in the Washington Chronicle. Here it is.

In order to secure a reliable and unquestionable working majority in the next Congress, it will be necessary for the Republican party to organize itself thoroughly, act as a unit, and never allow a whisper against the arranged and determined purposes of the party.

Personal friends must be forgotten and extremes of policy must be compromised in some way.

MURDER IN PHILADELPHIA .- A horrible murder was committed on Wednesday night in the vicinity of Broad and Christian streets, Philadelphia. Thomas Williamson was found dead in his house, in a shocking state of mutilation, his body being almost entirely severed in two. A man who was suspected of having intimacy with his wife has been arrested, having, it is said, been seen coming from the house soon after the crime was committed. Williamson was a soldier on leave of absence, and of dissipated habits.

"THERE IS NO SUCH WORD AS FAIL." COMPOUND EXTRACT OF OUBEBS AND COPAIBA.

This preparation is particularly recommended to the MEDICAL PROPESSION and the PUBLIC, as combining, in the most convenient and efficacious form, the well-established virtues and properties of Cubebs and Copaba. For the speedy and effectual relief and cure of all SEXUAL DISEASES, it may justly be considered one of the greatest and most valuable discoveries in the annula of medicine, frequently effecting a cure in three or four days. In its preparation as an extract or a paste, the usual nauseous taste is avoided, and it is, consequently, never found to interfere with the digestion, while, from its greater concentration, the dose is much reduced. It may be relied on as the best mode for the administration of these remedies in the large class of diseases of both sexes to which they are applicable.

N. B.—Purchasers are advised to ask for TARRANTS COMPOUND EXTRACT OF CUBEBS AND CUPAIBA, and to take nothing else—as imitations and worthiess preparations, under similar names, are in the market. Pamphlets accompany the medicine, containing full and ample directions. Price, $1.00. Sent by express on receipt of price.

OMETHING NEW:

THE PATENT STAMP-SEALING AND POST-MARK PRESERVING ENVELOPE.

The preservation on the letter itself of the POST-MARK and POSTAGE-STAMP, generally destroyed with the detached cover, has long been deemed a matter of the first importance. This desideratum is now triumphaulty secured by this ingenious invention. Many obvious advantages must arise from the general use of this envelope.

First-increased Safety by additional scaling; the stamp connecting the envelope and letter securely together; and this is never liable to be omitted, though the sticking of the flap is frequently neglected or imperfectly done.

Scond-Security against Impertinent Intrusion; the letter and envelope being firmly attached by the stamps, and inclosure cannot be inspected even if the flap be clandestinely opened.

Third—Safety against Abstraction of Valuable Inclosures. If the flap be left unscaled, or opened with felonious intent, it will be impossible to open the letter and take thence bank notes and drafts without so mutilating the envelope as to insure detection.

Furth-Security for the free payment of the Postage: thence bank notes and drafts without so mutilating the envelope as to insure detection.

Fourth-—Security for the free payment of the Postage; as the stamp, when once properly placed in this window, cannot be removed without its destruction.

Fifth-—Advantage therefore to the Government; by the efficutual destruction of every stamp in its first use.

Sixth-—Facility to the Post Office Deparations; by a uniform location of the stamp in the upper right hand corner, which is the most convenient position for the Post Office mark.

Securit-—Verification of the Mailing; by securing on the letter itself the legal evidence of the time and place of it being mailed. This has long been estcomed so desirable, that many prudent persons are constrained to dispense that many prudent persons are constrained to dispense with the use of envelopes, that they may have the post mark on the letter; and other stake the precaution to pin the envelope again on the letter for identification. Eighth—Cherlainty of the Date and Place on the Letter, which are so frequently omitted by writers in carelessness or hurry. or hurry.

Ninth—Ornamentation; which, though some may think of small importance, certainly meets the approval of all of small importance, certainly meets the approval of all persons of taste.

Tentic—Cost. Notwithstanding the many and unrivalled advantages of the "Stamp Sealing Envelopes," they will be furnished at a very small advance upon the prices of those not having the benefit of this patent.
