AN OLD STORY.
Softly the sun's last rays are glistening
Over the hills, over the firs,
Flushing the dusky clouds, and tinting
With gold and crimson the purple sea;
And the old man, with a sigh, and a tear,
Looks out upon the landscape,
And thinks of the days that are past,
And the youth of his own life,
And the old man, with a sigh, and a tear,
Looks out upon the landscape,
And thinks of the days that are past,
And the youth of his own life.

WHO, AND WHENCE?
Not from Jerusalem alone,
To Heaven the path ascends,
To reach the celestial day,
From further realms extends;
From the East, from the West,
From the North, from the South,
From the East, from the West,
From the North, from the South,
From the East, from the West,
From the North, from the South.

Roasting a Man Alive!
A TRUE STORY OF IRISH BURGLARS.
BY J. GOLDRICK.
I was visiting at my grandfather's, it was a little boy, a long time ago. I was, I think, three or four years after the memorable battle of Waterloo. The armies then stationed in the towns and villages of the interior of Ireland, were not yet disbanded. A great number of the yeomanry were still under arms. The country was much disturbed; farmers burdened with enormous taxation; law, partially administered; Orangeism rampant; while robbery, outrage and vagabondism of the darkest dye, were matters of almost every day occurrence.

My grandfather was reputed rich; one of those Irish farmers denominated Middlemen, in good circumstances. His house was comfortable, a good-looking mansion of the cottage order of that day, substantially built on the roadside, one mile from Drombar, in the hospitable county of Leitrim. The old gentleman was, at the time of my visit, about eighty years of age, and, as far as I could see, was in the prime of life. His consort, who was not my grandmother, but his wife by a second marriage, was nearly twenty years younger than he. She was in personal appearance anything but a pleasing woman to look on, and was besides, crossed with a sour temper, always unhappy, sulky, and dissatisfied. So very disagreeable was she to the children of her first wife, that I was almost glad to see her go. It was at the time of my visit, that I was first introduced to the old family mansion, or, as it was called, the castle, by the old man, who was then in the family almost from infancy.

It was in the latter end of September, a dark, cold, windy night, about 11 o'clock; the old man and his wife had retired to their chamber, a sleeping room off the parlor; the hired man crept to his bunk on the garret, and in a short time was sound asleep. I, however, was still up at the kitchen fire, tending to the pot, and, as I was alone, I was a little restless. I was sitting at the top of her voice; the robbers all gathered round the fire; the sentry fell his post at the door and dashed up the ladder, to settle accounts with the man on the garret, whose lusty yell was bidding fair to gather the whole parish around the house.

In the confusion 'worse confounded' that ensued I found a chance to slip out, in bare buff coat as I was. Outside the door I stumbled on the sentry's gun, which, in the hurry of his flight up to the garret, he had forgotten. I ran 'cross lots, with the fire-lock in my hand, and when about twenty rods from the house I cooked and discharged it. The recoil of the piece knocked me down, but after a minute I was able to rise, and hear the whole brigade of out-throats flying in wild confusion over the hill in the direction of Drombar. The report of the gun alarmed them, and supposing, I presume, that an armed force was in pursuit, they precipitately fled, leaving the horse and cart at the door, with all their booty and firearms.

When I entered the house I found many of the neighbors before me. The old man was unharmed and calm. Next morning all the gentlemen of the county, with the authorities and doctors, were assembled. The guns were examined and found to be the arms of the yeomanry of the district; the horse belonged to the officer of the company; the robbers were the soldiers of the village, some of them my grandfather's near neighbors. The ten pounds were restored, but for the credit of endure the idea of lying either with the old couple, or the hired man, it was not thought indecorous in virtuous old Ireland that a gauger of my age should sleep with the servant maid, providing the fair damsel herself should have no objection. With my own maid, neither had I, and accordingly, at about half-past eleven o'clock, we found ourselves in the warm pouch bed, with the fire raked and the lights extinguished.

It might have been half an hour after we retired, when a gentle rap was heard at the front door.
'Who's there?' asked the girl, with a kind of tremulous voice, giving me at the same time a slight nod and with her elbow to arrest my attention.
'A friend, Winny; open the door,' was the reply from rather a genteel voice outside.

I can't tell you who you are, and what's your business, spoke the girl, sitting up in the bed and commencing to dress herself.
'Make no fuss, Winny,' said the voice; 'don't wake the old man, a coffin, I only want to hand in this story-book to the little boy.' It was sent to him by me, and in truth it'll make him laugh till the buttons fly off his jacket. Here, take it out of my hand, and don't keep me standing in the cold all night.'

The girl still hesitated, but the temptation of a story-book, and one so funny, was more than a little boy fond of the marvellous could resist. I kicked off the blanket, leaped out of bed, and in two springs was at the front door, drew back the bolt, removed the cross-bars, and swung the heavy door full open.
But horror of horrors! instead of the smooth-tongued bearer of a funny story-book, in marched six or eight huge fellows, with guns in their hands and faces blackened.

The foremost of the villains stroked me on the head, called me a good boy, bid me not fear, and taking me up in his left hand as if I had been a young kitten, laid me back in the bed and commanded me to cover up my head, and keep my mouth shut, on pain of being instantly shot; if I gave the least alarm. Poor Winny! she was bound and feet, blindfolded, and put to keep me company. The man on the garret was similarly dealt with, after receiving a crack from the butt-end of a musket that nearly fractured the poor fellow's skull.

One scoundrel stood sentinel at the door with fixed bayonet. Another in the centre of the floor, with cooked musket, threatened to shoot the first who attempted to utter a syllable. Two others went into the old gentleman's room, while two more commenced to ransack the house for booty. Everything valuable that could be borne away was collected. Yarn, linen, bacon, butter, bed covering and wearing apparel were stuffed into sacks brought for the purpose, and piled on a cart in waiting at the door. The old gentleman was then rudely lifted out of bed, blindfolded, and placed in an arm chair in front of the kitchen fire. His wife was served in the same manner. He was then commanded to give up his money, on pain of being roasted alive!

'I have no money in the house, gentlemen, said my grandfather, 'except ten pounds, which you will find there in the till of my box.'
'That's a lie for you old Dives,' spoke the leader, 'where's the 100 guineas your wife there, and the mother of the little boy in the bed, took out of the leather pallet bag before yesterday, and hid by your order in some safer place,' continued the robber, giving the old man a rude shake that nearly jostled him out of his seat.
'No such thing, sir,' said my grandfather, 'I can safely swear on the Bible, there is not a copper under this roof at my disposal, except the ten pounds ready in your hands.'

'It's some place else out of doors then,' answered the villain, 'give us the whereabouts, or take the value in good sound roasting.'
'You would not be so barbarous as to roast a poor old man of eighty, replied my grandfather, appealing to the humanity of a scoundrel, who had no more of a feeling than a tiger of the jungle.'
'Wouldn't I indeed,' answered the leader, with another shake and rude laugh, which evinced his determination to carry the wicked threat into execution, 'keep us five minutes longer in waiting, and may I say—if I don't roast your old hide on that fire like a salt herring?'

'I have no gold or silver, either within or without my house, finally replied the old man, 'whatever treatment you give me.'
'Down with his drawers, off with his fish bag,' roared the miscreant, and, snatching the action to the command, the poor old gentleman was stripped naked to his waist, lifted between four of the scoundrels and laid on the burning embers of the hot turf-fire raked out for the purpose.
The scoundrel, who had no more of a feeling than a tiger of the jungle, screamed at the top of her voice; the robbers all gathered round the fire; the sentry fell his post at the door and dashed up the ladder, to settle accounts with the man on the garret, whose lusty yell was bidding fair to gather the whole parish around the house.

In the confusion 'worse confounded' that ensued I found a chance to slip out, in bare buff coat as I was. Outside the door I stumbled on the sentry's gun, which, in the hurry of his flight up to the garret, he had forgotten. I ran 'cross lots, with the fire-lock in my hand, and when about twenty rods from the house I cooked and discharged it. The recoil of the piece knocked me down, but after a minute I was able to rise, and hear the whole brigade of out-throats flying in wild confusion over the hill in the direction of Drombar. The report of the gun alarmed them, and supposing, I presume, that an armed force was in pursuit, they precipitately fled, leaving the horse and cart at the door, with all their booty and firearms.

the service the infamous affair was quashed. The old man never recovered from the shock of that night; about ten months after he died, leaving one hundred guineas to each of his children, of whom he had seven then living. Winny was bequeathed forty pounds, married an industrious husband, and emigrated to America.
This was the last robbery that came to my knowledge in that peaceful locality, and the last man I heard of roasted alive in the beloved land that gave me birth.

A THRILLING ADVENTURE.
Fourteen years ago, I drove from Littleton, a distance of forty-two miles, and I had to await the arrival of two or three coaches, did not start till after dinner; so I very often had a good distance to drive after dark.
It was in the dead of winter, and the season had been a tough one. A great deal of snow had fallen, and the drivers were ploughed deep. The mail I carried was not due at Littleton, by the contract, until one o'clock; but this winter the postmaster was very often obliged to sit up a little later than that for me.
One day in January, when I drove up for my mail at Danbury, the postmaster called me into his office.

'Pete,' said he, with an important serious look, 'there's some pretty heavy money packages in that bag, and be pointed to the bag as he spoke. He said the money was from Boston to some land agents up near the Canadian line. Then he asked me if I had got any passengers who were going through to Littleton. I told him I did not know; 'but suppose I haven't?' said I.
'Why,' said he, 'the agent of the lower route came to-day, and he says that there have been two suspicious characters on the stage that came up last night, and he suspects that they have an eye upon the mail, so that it will stand in hand to be a little careful.'

He said the agent had described one of them as a short, thick-set fellow, about forty years of age, with long hair, and a thick, heavy lump of beard on the chin, but none on the side of his face. He did not know anything about the other. I told the old fellow I guessed there wasn't much danger, for if you have got passengers through, but I only told you this so that you might look out for your mail, and look out when you change horses.'
I answered that I should do so, and then took the bag under my arm and left the office. I stowed the mail under my seat a little more carefully than usual, placing it so that I could keep my feet against it; but beyond that, I did not feel any concern. It was past one when I started, and I had four passengers, two of whom rode to my first stopping place. I reached Gowans's Mills at dark, where we stopped for supper, and where my other two passengers concluded to stop for the night.

About 6 o'clock in the evening, I left Gowans's Mills alone, having two horses and an open wagon.
I had seven miles to go, and a hard seventeen miles it was, too. The night was quite cold, but the wind was sharp and cold, the loose snow flying in all directions, while the drifits were deep and closely packed. It was slow, tedious work, and my horses soon became leg-weary and restive. At the distance of six miles I came to a little settlement called Blue Corners, where I took fresh horses. I had been going that distance. Just as I was going to start, a man came up and asked me if I was going through to Littleton. I told him I should go through, if the thing could be possibly done. He said he was very anxious to go, and as he had no baggage, I told him to jump in and make himself as comfortable as possible. I was gathering up my lines, when the hostler came up and asked me if I knew that one of my horses had hit himself badly. I jumped out and went with him, and found that one of the horses had got a deep cork out on the off fore foot. I gave such direction as I considered necessary, and was about to turn away, when the hostler remarked that he thought I came alone. I told him I did.

'Then where did that passenger come from?' he asked.
'He has just got in,' I answered.
'Got in from where?'
'I don't know.'
'Well, now,' said the hostler, 'that's kind of curious. There ain't no such man been at the house, and I know that there ain't been none at the neighbors.'
'Let us have a look at his face,' said I; 'we can get that much, at any rate. Do you go back with me, and when I get into the wagon, I'll hold your lantern; I know that the light will shine into his face.'
He did as I wished, and as I stepped into the wagon I got a fair view of such portions of my passenger's face as was not muffled up. I saw a short, thick frame, full, hardy features, and I could see that there was a heavy beard under the chin. I thought of the man, whom the postmaster had described to me, but I didn't think seriously upon it until we had started. Perhaps I hadn't got half a mile when I noticed that the mail bag wasn't in its old place under my feet.

'Hallo!' says I, holding up my horse a little, where's my mail?
My passenger sat on the seat behind me, and I turned toward him.
'Here is a bag, of some kind, slipped back under my feet,' he said, 'giving it a kick, as though he'd shove it forward. Just at this moment my horse lumbered into a deep snow drift, and I was forced to get out and tread down the snow ahead of them and lead them through it.'
'But I am afraid, sir, I shall disappoint you.'
'Never mind that, give us a tune anyhow.'
'But I am a poor player, and I have a poor instrument.'
'No matter for that, I want to hear you.'
'Well, sir, since you insist upon it,' said the poor man, 'I will tell you that I don't play at all. I carry this clarinet merely for the purpose of frightening people with my performance.'

A captain of a steamboat on the Mississippi river, who had fought in the battles of the Texas revolution, offered a free passage in his boat to any soldier who had participated in a certain engagement. One day a man claimed free passage, asserting that he was in the battle. He was referred to the captain.
'In what capacity did you serve?'
'High private.'
'Stranger,' said the captain, 'give me your hand; I have passed two thousand and eighty-two who were in that engagement, and you are the very first private I have seen.'

THE NEW MODE OF BEGGING.—The Courier of Paris tells the story of a beggar who presented himself regularly at a certain coffee house with a clarinet under his arm. 'Will you allow me, gentlemen,' he said, 'in an humble tone of voice, if you please to play a tune? I am no virtuoso, and if you prefer giving me a trifle, I will spare you the annoyance of listening to me.' Every one felt at once for a few stray coppers, and the musician departed with a profound reverence. This he repeated several evenings in succession. At last, one evening, a young man, who had never failed to contribute to the wants of the itinerant musician, asked him in a friendly manner to give them a tune let it be good or bad; he wanted to hear him.
'But I am afraid, sir, I shall disappoint you.'
'Never mind that, give us a tune anyhow.'
'But I am a poor player, and I have a poor instrument.'
'No matter for that, I want to hear you.'
'Well, sir, since you insist upon it,' said the poor man, 'I will tell you that I don't play at all. I carry this clarinet merely for the purpose of frightening people with my performance.'

but he said he didn't feel very well—wouldn't try it; so I worked alone, and was all of a quarter of an hour getting out of the drift. When I got into the sleigh again, I began to feel for the mail bag with my feet, and found it where I had left it; but when I attempted to withdraw my foot, I discovered that it had become entangled in something I thought it to be the buffalo, and tried to kick it clear; but the more I kicked the more closely was it held. I reached down my hand, and after feeling for a few minutes, I found that my foot was in the mail bag! I felt again and found my hand in among the packages of letters and papers. I ran my finger along the edges of the opening, and became assured that the stout leather had been cut with a knife.
Here was a little more forethought before leaving Danbury; but as I knew that making such wishes was only a waste of time, I quickly gave it up, and began to consider what I had best do under the existing circumstances. I wasn't long in making up my mind upon a few essential points.—First, the man behind me was a villain; second, he had cut open the mail bag, and robbed it of some valuable matter. He must have known the money letters by the size and shape; third, he means to leave the stage on the first opportunity; and fourthly, he was prepared to shoot me if I attempted to arrest or detain him.
I resolved these things over in my mind, and pretty soon I thought of a course to pursue. I knew that to get my hands safely upon the rascal, I must take him unawares, and this I could not do while he was behind me—for his eyes were upon me all the time—so I must resort to strategy. Only a little distance ahead was a house; an old farmer named Longee lived there, and directly before it was a huge snow-bank stretched across the road, for which a track for wagons had been cleared with shovels.
As we approached the cut, I saw a light in the front room, as I was confident I should, for the old man generally sat up until the stage went by. I drove on, and when nearly opposite the dwelling stood up, as I had frequently done when approaching difficult places. I saw the snow-bank ahead, and could distinguish through it. I urged my horses to a good speed, and when near the bank forced them into it.
One of the runners mounted the edge of the bank, after which the other ran into the cut, thus throwing the sleigh over about as quick as though lightning had struck it. My passenger had not calculated on any such movement, and was not prepared for it;—but I had calculated and was prepared. He rolled out into the deep snow, with a heavy buffalo robe about him, while I lighted upon my feet directly on top of him. I punched his head into the snow, and when he had sunk to the neck I did not have to call a second time, for the farmer had come to the window to see me pass, and as soon as he saw my sleigh overturned, he had lighted his lantern and hurried out.
'What's to pay?' asked the old man as he came up.
'Lead the horses into the track, and then come here,' said I.
As I spoke, I partially loosened my hold upon the villain's throat, and he drew a pistol from his bosom; but I saw it in season, and jammed his head into the snow again, and got the weapon away from him. By this time Longee had led the horses out and came back, and I explained the matter to him in a few words as possible. We hauled the rascal out into the road, and upon examination we found about twenty packages of letters which he had stolen from the mail bag and stowed away in his pockets.
He swore, and threatened, and prayed; but we paid no attention to his blarney.—Longee got some stout cord, and when we had securely bound the villain, we tumbled him into the wagon. I asked the old man if he would accompany me to Littleton, and he said, 'of course.' So he got his overcoat and muffler, and ere long we started.

I reached the end of my route with my mail all safe, though not as snug as it might have been, and my mail bag a little the worse for the game that had been played upon it. However, the mail robber was secure, and within a week he was identified by some officers from Concord as an old offender; and I am rather inclined to the opinion that he is in State prison at the present moment. At any rate, he was there the last I heard of him.
That's the only time that I ever had any mail trouble, and I think that under all circumstances I came out of it pretty well.

A THOUGHTFUL BOY PUNISHED.—I shall never forget 'twas a correspondent of the Agriculturist, 'an incident of my childhood by which I was taught to be careful not to wound the feelings of the unfortunate. A number of us school boys were playing by the roadside on Saturday afternoon, when the stage coach drove up to a neighboring tavern and the passengers alighted. As usual we gathered around to observe them. Among the number was an elderly man with a cane, who got out with much difficulty, and when on the ground he walked with the most curious contortion. His feet turned one way his knees another and his whole body looked as though the different members were independent of it and each other, and every one was making motions to suit itself. I unwittingly shouted 'look at the old rattle bones!' and the other boys took up the cry with mocking laughter, while the poor man turned his head with an expression of pain which I never can forget. Just then to my surprise and horror, my father came around the corner and immediately stepping up to the stranger, shook his hands warmly, and assisted him to walk to our house, which was but at a little distance. I could enjoy no more play that afternoon, and when tea time came I would have liked myself, but I know that I was in vain, and so tremblingly went into the sitting room. To my great relief, the stranger did not recognize me, but remarked pleasantly to my father as he introduced me, 'such a fine boy was surely worth saving.' How the words cut me to the heart. My father had often told me the story of a friend who had plunged into the river to save me as I was drowned while at infant school, and in consequence of a cold then taken, had been crippled by inflammatory rheumatism; and this was the man whom I had made a butt of ridicule for my companions. I tell you, boys and girls, I would give many dollars to have the memory of that event taken away. If ever you are tempted as I was, remember that while no good can come of sport whereby the feelings of others are wounded, you may be laying up for yourselves painful recollections that will not leave you for a life time.'

A HARD HIT.—The scene of the following incident is in Western New York, in the town of D—, and the parties who are the heroes of it are two farmers named Jones and Atwood.
Their farms join; and, as is often the case, a quarrel about a certain side-hill line-fence. The quarrel resulted in a lawsuit, in which neighbor Jones, having a bad case on trial, gained the case. A short time after notice was given that there would be preaching on a certain evening in the school-house. On the appointed evening the neighbors assembled. The preacher, having finished his discourse from the text, 'What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?'—invited any of those present who wished to make a few remarks on the text. Brother Jones arose and commenced his remarks by saying:—
'What shall a man give for his soul?—How much is it worth? Can any one here tell me how much a soul is worth?'

Before he could proceed further neighbor Atwood jumped up, and with finger pointing to Brother Jones, said, in a shrill, piping voice, which penetrated every corner of the room:—
'I know what one man's soul is worth. It's worth just one rod of side-hill!'
