Miscellaneous.

The Great Juggernaut Saturnalia. The Calcutta correspondent of the London Times, on the 8th of July, gives a long and graphic description of scenes at the Suan Jattra and the Ruth Jattra-the two great festivals of Juggernaut, which are so widely celebrated in Hindoostan. Commencing on Sunday, the 19th of June, by the priests bringing forth the god to be bathed, it terminated on the 6th ult. when the cars were drawn back by thousands of people, and the god was replaced in his home. The writer attended both these ceremonies, and the details into which he enters will speedily dispel any idea as to the Hindoos having abandoned the horrible practice of throwing themselves under the wheels of the Juggernaut car. Passing over the bathing portion of the business, which seems to have partaken of the character of a farce, we will come at once to the closing part of the festival, which is said to have been a most sickening and revolting tragedy, and one which it was impossible to witness without horror and disgust: The crowd seemed infinitely more dense than it had ever been on the former occasion, and all along the road were booths filled with sweetmeats, hideous masks, trumpery, Birmingham ware images of Juggernaut, Krishna, and other deities of Hindoo mythology. It was a berbarous copy of a country fair. There were whistles and tom-toms shell-fish, smelling horribly in the sun, huge 'jack' fruit, some damaged pineapples, and here and there a rudely contrived 'merry-go-round,' with stout boys enjoying the sport which that machine is capable of furnishing. `There were nautch girls, hideously ugly, chanting their drawling, monotonous strains to the music of an old fiddle and a tom-tom. Then there were little acrobats, who made 'Catharine-wheels' like the boys who run, or used to run, by the side of omnibuses in London

. There was also a stereoscope, with views of the last Great Exhibition, on show at one pice each person. The confusion was indescribable, and when a shower of rain came on, as happily it did once or twice, the throng seemed to get up in a knot and to be incapable of disentangling itself, or of doing anything but roll helplessly from one side of the road to the other. The centres of attraction were the two Juggernaut cars. These are immense lumbering masses of wood, about 60 feet in hight, carved into all sorts of angles, and decorated on every square inch with figures of the deities. They are constructed in four-stories, so to speak, and upon each of these a crowd of Brahmins and their friends were collected.

er, and two ropes of great length were attached to the front of the car. The car moved upon six heavy wheels, and the entire weight of the ponderous fabric must have been enormous. Hour after hour the multitude streamed past the cars, which were at some distance to a shed, beneath which were placed a terward decorated with a little drapery and hoisted on to a car. It was not until four in the afternoon that a big gong was beaten on the topmost division of the first car, and with a great shout Juggernaut himself, swathed in red was fastened to him, and with much exertion he was hoisted from the stage by the Brahmins-for by himself the god seemed rather helpless.

They dragged him up and uncovered him, and the crowd salamed to him in their usual fashion. A huge, ugly thing he was, with enormous eyes, painted black, with a broad white rim around them. Than another god was brought and hoisted up in the same way, but to a lower division, and so on till all were full. The crowd meanwhile kept throwing garlands and donations to the Brahmins; dirty, common looking men, with nothing whatever to distinguish them from the common man, except the white Brahminical thread over their shoulders. When the gods were all in their places, two large wooden horses were brought out, one blue and the other white, each with a thick tail sticking up at an angle of ninety degrees. These gay steeds were fastened to the car, and a Brahmin stood upon the back of each, holding by a rope.

At this time the scene was extraordinary. Close by the side of the car was a large native house, broken and crumbling like most native houses. Through iron bars in front of this house some women were peering, and on the roof there were more women of the zenana, with an old crone keeping watch and guard over them. On the other side of the road was a Juggernaut temple, crowded with women. The road itself was quite impassable for the crowds of people, whose oily bodies and dirty ways did not improve the flavor of the heated atmosphere. Far as the eye could reach this throng extended, and when a thousand gongs were set beating and the Brahmins called upon the people, a thrill of wild excitement ran through this enormous living mass. The ropes were fixed, and multitudes rushed to them, eager for the honor of pulling their deity along.

On the car itself there could scarcely have been less than two hundred men. Perhaps there were 1,000 pulling on the ropes, but they pulled for a long time in vain. The car had been in one place for a whole year, and had made a deep hole for itself by its great weight. Again and again the Brahmins shouted | tioned are thus described by a writer in and gesticulated, laughing among them- | the Edingburg Review: selves. At last the mob happened to pull together instead of one after the other, and the huge mass moved formost perfect silence. Then the Brahof its hideous wheels, covered as they were with human flesh and gore.

The vast multitude seemed suddenly possessed with a fit of delirium. They fought and struggled with each other to | is raised in despir; the hands are clenchget near the car, which had stopped as ed convulsively. Her garments are if by magic. They stooped down and gathered up on one side, leaving expeered beneath its wheels, and rose with scared faces to tell their friends of the sight. I made my way to the back of the car, and there saw upon the ground a very old woman, all wrinkled and exquisite work of Greek art. She had puckered up, with scarcely a lineament | fled with her little treasure, which lay of her face recognizable for blood and scattered around her-two silver cups, dust. Her right foot was hanging by a a few jewels, and some dozen silver thread, the wheels had passed over the coins. Nor had she, like a good housecentre of her nearly naked body, and a wife, forgotten her keys, after having faint quiver of anguish ran through her frame as she seemed to struggle to rise. Not one in the crowd offered to move | by her side. her, or raise her miserable head from the ground, but they stood looking on with vacant stares, while the Brahmins from the car gazed down with as much | back, his arms extended by his sides, unconcern as could well be written upon and his feet stretched out as if, finding a human countenance. The crowd cried that there were more under the car, and down to meet death like a brave man. when I looked beneath it seemed as if His dress consists of a short coat or jerthe wheels were choked with dusky kin and tight-fitting breeches of some bodies. Two or three chockeydars here made their appearance and compelled the crowd to move back. Upon getting are laced tightly round his ankles. On closer to the wheels I saw that one of one finger is seen his iron ring. His them was half over the body of a man | features are strongly marked; the mouth and that it had crushed out his bowels, open as in death. Some of the teeth there lay another man crushed to death ie was but a heap of mangled flesh. The Brahmins still looked down from the cars upon these poor wretches with perfect unconcern, and were even signalizing for the crowd to pull again: but the few policemen present made them drag the car back, so that the bodies could be got out from between the wheels. The mob cried out "Apse, apse;" that they did it of their own acord; and, indeed, there was no appearance of an accident. Their bodies were far under the car, where they could scarcely have got unless they had laid themselves down in front. I saw two other men lying there when the car first stopped, but they got up and walked away. The three bodies were placed together, and the car was dragged on by the people once more. I did not stay to see whether its track was made in fresh

Pompeii. The discoveries which are made in

the uncovering of the ruins of Pompeii increase in interest from year to year. The present system of excavation is more scientific, and the objects which are revealed to the eyes of the modern world are more carefully preserved than formerly. The excavations of Pompeii commenced as long ago as the year 1748, when a Colonel Alcubierre, who had been sent to inspect a new canal or water course, observed that it was constructed through ancient ruins. He obtained permission from Charles III. to make excavations, and in a few days he opened a house in Pompeii. The ruined city was then supposed to be Stable, and it was not until nearly eight years after the discovery that it was identified as Pompeii. The continuous labors of the Neapolitan government from that time forward, have uncovered an extensive city, with the streets and lower stories of houses, the temples and baths, the furniture and decorations, and in many instances with the skeletons of the ancient inhabitants. Readers are familiar with the details of these strange and interesting discoveries. The more recent excavations have added greatly to the interest of Pompeii, and Mr. Giuseppe Fiorelli has achieved a very important success, surpassing in some respects all that had been done before his appointment to the superintendence. The Revue des Deux Mondes lately gave a remarkable sketch of the life and career of this very learned and accomplished Italian. He was a man of great ability, a scholar, a twentythree years of age vice president of the Italian convention of savans of Genoa, the subject of persecution by the Neapolitan Government, imprisoned, his manuscripts destroyed, and himself finally reduced to earn his living by laying pavement in the streets of Naples. He was appointed inspector of the Pompeiian excavations after the establishment of the Italian kingdom, and he has justified the appointment. By a more careful system he has succeeded in uncovering the second story and projecting balconies of houses, a feature hitherto unknown in Pompeii. This from each other, or they turned aside latter portion is built of brick, supported by timbers, and the evidence thus number of indecently painted idols, af- gained shows that the narrow streets of the city were shaded from the sunshine much as oriental cities now are. This gives us a new idea of a Roman city. Pompeii was heretofore little more than a ruin. Streets with ruined walls of houses on each side. Now we can see cloth was brought to the spot. A rope the city as it was. The careful preservation of fragments, noting positions in which found, and observing minutest particulars, enables Signor Fiorelli to restore the entire house, instead of leaving it a dilapidated ruin as heretofore. But the most remarkable discovery of > the eruption which destroyed the city the ashes fell in some places with considerable quantities of water, forming in fact a mud or paste which hardened over many objects. This fact had been noticed in one or two instances, and the great show article of the museum had been the impression of a female breast in the hardened mould. But Fiorelli has gone farther, and obtained easts of entire body in several instances. He has found the moulds where the mud formed around the bodies of the dying Pompeilans, and pouring plaster into the hollow he obtains a fac simile statue of the man or woman, just as he or she yielded to the terrible catastrophe. The eloquence of these statues surpass all description. There were four bodies found in one street. Among them were evidently a mother and daughter. The mother died calmly, lying on her side, perhaps suffocated. The daughter died not so easily. She was not sixteen years old. Her limbs, restored on the plaster cast, are in an attitude of pain, her small fingers clenched in the agony of the death strugle. She had thrown a veil over her face and bowed her head in her arms, to shield her face from the blast of the fiery storm. The very fashion of her dress is perfectly shown in the cast, and there is a startling peculiarity in the exhibition of the smooth skin and rounded flesh where there are rents in her garments. There can be no criticism of such statues as these. They are the reproduction out of the distant past of the very agony of death coming on the Roman mother and her child. There is no failure in the copy. There it isas the storm of ashes both caused and preserved it-in said mould, the human anguish that the casting now reveals. Looking at it, one hears the very moan of the young girl as she buries her face in her arms, and yields to the terror of that awful night on Pompeii.

Signor Fiorelli is to be mentioned. In

At some distance from this group lay a third woman. She appears to have been about twenty-five years of age, and ward a few yards groaning as if it had to have belonged to a better class than been a living creature. It stopped, and the other two. On one of her fingers for a few minutes the crowd stood in al- were two silver rings, and her garments were of a finer texture. Her linen head mins gave the signal, and this time it dress, falling over her shoulders like crushed out a life with every revolution | that of a matron in a Roman statue, can still be distinguished. She had fallen on her side, overcome by the heat and gasses: but a terrible struggle seems to have preceded her last agony. One arm posed a limb of beautiful shape. So perfect a mould of it has been formed by the soft and yielding mud, that the cast would seem to be taken from an probably locked up her stores before seeking to escape. They were found

The fourth cast is that of a man of the people, perhaps a common soldier. He is almost a colossal size. He lies on his escape impossible, he had lain himself coarse stuff, perhaps leather. Heavy sandals with soles studded with nails and fastened itself like some insatiable still remain, and even part of the mousmonster in his blood. Close by him tache adheres to the plaster.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

It is well known to the medical profession that IRON is the vital Principle or Life Element of the blood. This is derived chiefly from the food we cat; but if the food is not properly digested, or if, from any cause whatev r, the necessary anality of iron is not taken into the circulation, or becomes reduced, the whole system surfers. The bad blood will irritate the heart, will clog up the lungs, will stupefy the brain, will obstruct the liver, and will send its disease producing elements to all parts of the system, and every one will suffer in whatever organ may be predisposed to disease.

IRON AS A MEDICINE

is well known and acknowledged by all medi-cal men. The difficulty has been to obtain such a preparation of it as will enter the circulation and assimilate at once with the blood. This point, says Dr. Hayes, Massachusetts State Chemist, has been attained in the Peruviun Syrup, by combination in a way before un-known.
