jured her, by all that she held most sacred, to tell him if she really loved him. Catterinnella, inspired by his passionate excitement, about to decide her fate, trembled no more. She forgot her fears of Egidio his cruelty and jealousy ; she forgot all save Raphael-the sun under whose rays she expanded into a new delicious life; Raphael, the god of her idolatry, who stood pale and speechless before her. Raising her eyes to his face, she gave utterance to the love she had long secretly cherished in her, and confessed in faltering accents that he was dear to her beforeall other mortals. Egidio was struck dumb when he heard his fate pronounced by the lips of her he loved. Seizing his knife, which had lain on the floor, he rushed from the studio. Relieved from the fascination of Raphael's countenance and majestic presence, Egidio, clasping his weapon in his hand, resolved to return and murder him; but when he remembered her words-when he recalled those passionate words in which she had confessed her love-his resolution again changed. "Why kill him when she loves me not?" exclaimed he. Honor and despair strove in the breast of the savage soldier; love, hope, life-all have passed in the possession of another, and that other man so godlike that he could scarcely, even in the wildest paroxysms of his jealousy, wonder at her preference. His violent nature could not endure the torture of his soul, and in utter despair, he plunged into his own breast the weapon he had raised against Sanzio.

The Text.

A pious old lady, who was too unwell to attend meeting, used to send her thick-headed husband to church to find out the text the preacher selected as the foundation of his discourse. The poor dunce was rarely fortunate enough to remember the words of the text, or even the chapter and verse where they could be found; but one Sabbath he ran home in hot haste, and with a smirk of satisfaction on his face, informed his wife that he could repeat every word without missing a syllable. The words were as follows:

"An angel came down from heaven, and took a live coal from the altar." "Know every word," said the husband.

"I am anxious to hear it," continued the wife. "They are nice words," observed the husband. "I'm glad your memory is improving, but don't keep me in suspense, my dear,' said she. "Just get your big Bible and I will say the words, for I know them by heart.

Isaid them a hundred times on my way home." "Well, now, let's hear them."

"Ahem !" said he clearing his throat." "An Injun came down from New Haven and took a live colt by the tail, and jerked him out of the haltar."
