Mr. Mensley in whose house Tom Sayers died, the poor fellow clung with an almost childish affection, his last words in consciousness having been ad dressed to the former of the two

He had literally gone to the house of Mr. Mensley—a boot and shoe maker who it seems had made all Tom's fighting boots for him-to die. His two children had been placed at school by Mr. Bennett. The girl appears to be about fifteen or sixteen, and has a face for which the face of the Puritan maiden, in Millais' picture of the Concealed Royalist, might very well pass as a por-trait. Her brother is younger by a year or two, and seems a frank, intelligent lad; but they were both so painfully affected that judgment of character was for that time out of the question.

----The Homes of Andrew Jackson and Daniel Webster.

"The Hermitage," or what once was the home of President Jackson, is rapidly going to decay. It stands without a tenant, and the only article of furniture siderable sums in England at the outit contains is an old arm-chair, which report has it, did once belong to General Washington, Adjacent to the house. in a rudely built log hut. lives an old negro and his wife, formerly belonging to General Jackson. The sacred tomb of the soldier statesman and his wife is in a corner of the garden. It is in the form of a Temple of Liberty. One of the large stones covering the remains has sunk down, and like the rest of the premises is going to ruin. The garden, once so beautiful, is overgrown with weeds and grass. The fences are nearly all down and rotten ; in fact, all is desolation. The property was left to an adopted son, anephewof General Jackson, who sold it to the Commonwealth of Tennessee, its owner still.

"Marshfield," the home of Webster, is themselves good-from a conscience too sensative, a taste too fastidious, a selfquite a watering place, and is becoming more so every summer. Hence the mansion is much resorted to. The family having charge of the farm admit visitors to the library containing some 4,000 volumes; to the parlors filled with curiosities that were presented to Mr. Webster; to "the chamber where the good man met his fate;" and the grounds on the receipt of a small fee. The house is just as Mr. Webster left it; a spacious one of wood, painted white, and with green blinds. It is quite far from the street, in the style of an English gentleman's home, and has that magnificent old English elm beside it, as formerly. None of the Webster name now reside at "Marshfield," though the widow of the late Col. Fletcher Webster usually spends a month or two on the farm. The place will soon be owned by Ash burton Webster, a grandson of Daniel, or as soon as he is of age. He is connected with the United States Navy, and promises to be worthy of the name. Daniel Webster, who bears the great name of his grandfather, and a son of Col. Fletcher Webster, is now there, and apparently in the last stages of a fatal disease. As most know, none of Mr. Webster's children are living; and but three grandchildren of his name, the two already mentioned, and their sister. There are also four grandchilegant. dren by the name of Appleton, children of his much-loved daughter Julia. All his children are buried at his side in the family tomb.

When is a Man Drunk ?

A witness in a New York police court, last week, gave his views on the subject in reply to the questions of a counsel in the pending case as follows . Lawyer.--Was Mr. Graham drunk? Witness.(metaphysically.)--Well, I'll tell you, I don't think he was drunk, because it is pretty hard to tell when a man is really drunk. L.-Then you have got enlarged ideas on the subject of drunk? W.-Yes, sir. I call a man sober as long as he can walk straight, and not and miserable workers. Now it is only
