Negro Barbarism.

Negro Barbarism.

During the late terrible storm upon the const of Texas the little island of Brazos, off the mouth of the Rio Grande del Norte, was almost submerged. It has long been used as a port for the valley of the river and has been occupied for several years as a healthy post for a part of the colored troops now stationed on the Mexican frontier. Several families were placed in a most critical condition during the hurricame, and were forced to ask help of the negroes; but were forced to ask help of the negroes; but this was refused, and instead of rendering this was refused, and instead of rendering aid to the suffering inhabitants, they commenced a harbatous plundering of goods and merchandise. One negro was shot while engaged in the robbery.

It is readily seen from this that the negroes, even when trained under military discipline, are not to be trusted at the moment when opportunity presents itself for the action of their base natures. Such little nots only show what may be expected if the negroes, making use of the power given to them by the radicals, commence, en masse, to revel throughout the South in the barbaric tastes which govern them.
