TAXES! TAXES! TAXES! TAXES! TAXES!!!
Taxes upon all that man can eat:
Taxed on our flour, and taxed on our meat,
Taxed upon all that covers his back,
Taxed upon all that covers his back,
Trom his cotton shirt, to his broadcloth black,
Taxed on whatever is pleasant to see,
To hear, or smell to feel or to be.
Taxes! taxes! nothing but taxes!!
Grinding our noses as sharp as axes.

AND WHAT ARE THE TAXES FOR ? Why !—the Freedmen's Bureau to keep in r pair, So that Radical loafers can each have a chair, And a chance for the pickings and stealings Taxes ! Inxes! Republican taxes !!
Taxed on the comin, and taxed on the crib.
On the old man's shroud, and the baby's bib,
To pumper the bigot, and fatten the knave, Taxed from the cradic plump into the grave. AND WHAT ARE THE TAXES FOR Why, to buy all the rogues they can find far and near
And give S. M. Clark half a million a year.

Taxes! taxes! Republican Taxes!! For rich men to shrink, and for poor men to pay,

"But what under the sun that chit of a thing wants of Mr. Black, I, don't see," she muttered, as she went out.

Cobweb sat down and waited with all settence. Soon she came back saying patience. Soon she came back, saying he would be ready presently. Cobweb waited an hour, and he did not come; then another hour and no Mr. Black. She was about to ring for some one to find out what the trouble was, when in the came all smiles saying:

THE THREE CRIMES. An Eastern Tale.

Hamet Abdallah was an inhabitant of a grotto on one of the slopes of Mount Olympus. When he stood at the entrance of his humble dwelling, he could embrace at one glance all the territory originally possessed by Osman, the founder of the Ottoman empire; and, as he five times a day offered up his prayers to Allah, he invoked blessings upon the head of Solyman the Magnificent, the reigning Sultan in whose time he lived. Indeed, Abdallah was renowned for his sanctity; and the inhabitants of the vicinity of his dwelling treated him with the most marked respect.

He was not, however, entitled to this excessive veneration by his age; for he had scarcely attained his fortleth year when the incident of this tale took place. His venerable father, who was himself a dervise of great sancitity, and whose years amounted to four-score, resided with him in the same grotto; and fortunate was deemed the individual who, on his way along the slopes of Olympus, was allowed to join in the prayers of the two dervises, kneeling upon the ground at the entrance of the cave, and turning their countenances toward the holy cities of Mecca and Medina.

Hamet Abdallah was one morning roving amidst the groves and woods, which extended up the mountain far above his grotto, and pondering upon the passage in the Koran which he had

A terrible murder had been committed, and the Hotel de Barren, situated on the Rou Saint Saviour, in Paris, was in a terrible ferment. A thousand reports were in circulation, but they all differed very materially. Some declared that during the night a dozen savage-looking men had entered the hotel, armed to the teeth, had bound the servants, and then committed the deed of blood. And yet the domestics were all free. Others said that a single robber had done the work, but as nothing valuable was missing, the lie was given to this assertion. she stood upon that of the Hotel de Ra-voin, and affixed her cord. She looked down towards the window, and saw lazy wreathes of smoke rolling out. She believed that Henri was seated there with his cigar, and soon she knew this was the case, for she heard him singing a lively air.

Presently his head appeared in view. He gazed around in every direction, and then felt downwards with his hands, as if searching for something. After this he disappeared.

Quickly did Matlida slide down her cord. She gazed into the apartment, and she saw Henri examine every corner where a human being could be possibly concealed. Then he locked and bolted the door, and retired to his couch. The avenger watched him until she thought he was sleaping, and then he thought he was sleeping, and then she entered and approached his side. MARTIN VAN BURRN. BY JAMES PARTON.

"None but the brave deserve the fair !".

There is a deeper truth in this familof. Every great career, every grand reform, every benificent revolution, dates from an act of courage; and all the names dearest to mankind were made such by the valor of those who bore them. Martin Van Buren, though possessed of many excellent and some admirable qualities, though he rendered his party and his country valuable services, was wanting in the heroic traits, and hence his name has not that magical power with his countrymen which some men possess who were apparently his inferiors. As a public man, he was Prudence incarnate. He appeared to be always on his guard against committing himself. He never took the dangerous ini-He was never the real leader tiate. He was never the real teacer.

Nevertheless, as no man is responsible for gifts which he does not possess, and as Mr. Van Buren made a good use of those which he did possess, he is entitled to our respect, and will probably grow in the esteem of his countrymen the better he is known. We can at least seve of him that he was personal.

Artin van Buten was both it 1722, at Kinderhook, in the State of New York, in a log house. His father, a good-natured, illiterate man, possessed a few acres of land, and, it is said, eked out his livelihood by keeping the village tavern. His mother, tradition reports, school until he was fourteen years of age he was regularly apprenticed to the attorney of the village for the usual manner, while graduates of colleges, who could pay high premiums to their instructors, were admitted after only three years study. According to the custom of the time, this apprentice swept out his master's office, dusted his books, arranged his papers, and probably groomed his horse and dug in his carden.

apprenticeship, he obtained a release from his master, and went to New York to finish his studies. There he entered the office of Wm. P. Van Ness, a fa-mous lawyer at that day, and still more famous as a democratic politician, but now only remembered as the second of Aaron Burr in his lamentable duel with advising young men of promise. Seeing this diligent, polite and handsome youth in the office of his friend Van Ness, he cultivated his acquaintance, and made much of him, invited him to his house, and imparted to him the results of his experience in politics and in his profession. These conversations, it his profession. These conversations, it is supposed, stamped the forming character of this young man, and nourished in him that instinct of cattlon and secresy to which allusion has been made above. But if it was Aaron Burr who taught Martin Van Buren the tricks and artifices of politics, he learned from the President, Thomas Jefferson, those fundamental principles of demography.

fundamental principles of democracy which Burr despised. In his twenty-first year, Mr. Van Buren returned to his native Kinder-hook and began the profession of the The first vote which he ever cast in his life does him much honor. It was at an election for Governor of the was at an election for Governor of the State, in which Morgan Lewis was the regular candidate of the democratic party, and Aaron Burr was an irregu-lar or botting candidate. following eminent soldiers were present at the opening of the Sailors' and Soldiers' Convention in New York: Generals William F. Smith. Slocum, Averill McClernand, Andrew Porter, T. Kilby McClernand, Andrew Porter, T. Kilby Smith, Ewing, Granger, McCandless, and a host of others. As their Representative General Wm. B. Franklin spoke as follows: Fellow Soldiers and Sailors: I thank you for this high and undeserved compilment. Never having presided in any body regulated by parliamentary law, I shall have to claim your indulgence for any mistakes, which I may make. But I hope, that no serious questions of order will arise. If they do, I shall decide them as impartially as I can, and I look confidently to the fairness and justice of the Convention for an endorsement of the decision of the Chair. [Applause] It is, I hope, not amiss for me to give in a fev words what are my ideas of the uses and duties of this Convention. Since the commencement of this government secret societies of military men who have served, have been viewed by the people with intense jealousy. This view is a natural and proper one. It is the duty of military men in a free country, when no longer in service, to return to their peaceful avocations (applause), and if they desire to be beard in the civil councils of the nation, to take their places with other civilians, and by legal and usual means exert the influence which their positions as citizens give them. They have no right (and I mean it in the broadest sense of the term) to attempt to exercise influence or gain power from their positions as military men. [Prolonged applause.] The exercise of such influence will in the end be subversive of free institutions, and will surely such influence will in the end be subversive of free institutions, and will surely prepare the grave of liberty, paving the way for a military despot, who will rule this whole country with the sword, just as one-third of it has been ruled for the last three years. Under the influence of secret military exolution, elections will be a constant.

the manner which I have deprecated. The question is pertinent and must be answered. In the first place our Convention is no secret association. Next there is now existing in the Northern and Westorn States, and for aught I know, it the Southern States, a secret military or Before he had completed his term of purpose he had completed his term of purpose he had completed his term of purpose he had completed his release overy corner of the land. patriotism which carried mon into the field on our side during the robellion, and its objects are unknown to any outside of its ranks, unless we can judge of them by its acts. I refer to the self-styled Grand Army of the Republic, [Hisses.] Whatever may have been the object of the originators of this organization, and I will admit that it may have been a good one, I hold it to be dangerous to civil liberty at present, for wherever it is felt it has for its object to galu success for one side in politics. [Applause.] The natural effect of this militure partisanship is to band together such mi tary men as do not agree with it, and the effect may be with those of that class where this pressure most bitterly, to meet the heads. I acknowledge that at present this cloud is no bigger than a man's hand, but events march with rapid strides in times like these, and the storm may be upon us before we know it.
