My Brother Leonard.

BY JULIA KAVANAGH.

It has always seemed to me, since passed those giddy but happy years of my youth when we feel too much to care to think,—it has, I say, always seemed to me, that some of us are born to act and to suffer, and others to sit passively and look on. From childhoo upwards to this present hour,---when I sit writing alone, a white haired wo man, in an old chateau of Provence-to be the silent witness of my brother Leonard's life has been my lot. No lover came to me; no dream of love ever crossed my path. But I do not ra-gret it; no, I do not regret it, though I m pay a phildless old meid, nole and the glories of God's world; but 1 was light as a bird then, ay, and as keen-eyed too, and ha a few minutes I had reached the tower. It was much alter-ed from my childish remembrance of it. I had ever known it bleak and bare backing and new minded me. We had not the heart to send her We had not the heart to send her am now a childless old maid, pale and withered. If love, with its blessings and torments, had sought me, if a hu looking, and now it bore manifest signs of being tenanted. There was a flask
