Poetry. LISTENING [ANGELS]

Blue against the bluer heavens Stood the mountain, calm and still ; Two white angels, bending eastward, Leant upon the hill. Listening leant those silent angels, And I, also, longed to hear What sweet strain of earthly music Thus could charm their ear.

I heard the sound of many trumpets And warlike march draw nigh; Solemnly a mighty army Passed in order by. But the clang had ceased; the ceho Soon had faded from the hill;

vame the angels, cam an Leant and listened still,

Then I heard a fainter clamor;
Forge and wheel were clashing
And the reapers in the meadow
Singing loud and clear.;

Then, as daylight slowly vanished. And the evening mists grew drag Solemnly, from distant voices Rose a vesper hymn.

being successfully accomplished. I returned home to New York. Of course, there were many thoughts crowding into my mind as we steamed up the harbor the morning I arrived; but, laugh at me as you will, uppermost among them was the feeling, or presentment, or whatever you choose to call it, that I was coming home to find the original of my picture, and so meet my fate. I wouldn't for the world, though, have confessed as much to any one, and never showed the picture. Nevertheless, it is the truth that I took the most unheard of pains to discover the faint known, and I never went anywhere without a faint hope of seeing her. I stared at every woman I met with light hair and dark eyes, hunted through photograph saloons, and always looked into every body's album—a thing that ordinarily I detest—but all my efforts were in vain; and finally I gave up the whole thing as a mystery it was uscless to puzzle my brains over. But at last, one day..."

I was watching them with much amusement and interest, especially the taffer one, who was very graceful in spite of her difference only a sin and a snare—and I would resource. maps on ner, it was growing too sweet-only a sin and a snare—and I would re-solve to break the spell, and tear myself away; but I could not."

6 Did you ever say a word about her picture?"

" Not a word. An odd thing happen "Not a word. An out thing nappend, though, that I must tell you. Her mother, one day, was showing me her album a very line one—when some one remarked that the plotograph of Miss Laura was very poor. "Ah!" said her but the other reached out and took my outstretched hand with a little moan. It think I have spräined my ankle, said she, in a soft, piteous voice. At that I lifted her gently with both my arms, and, as I did so, her friend exclaimed, joyfully: Oh, bless you, Mr. Haller!
