Grafting old Orchards.

In many instances, the better way to manage old fruit-trees is to cut them down at once, and start young trees. Many old fruit-trees are like old horses, which can never be rejuvenated. There is a law of limitation in the growth and productiveness of all sorts of fruit-trees, just as there is a limit to the growth and development of animals. When the branches of old fruit-trees begin to decay, if growth to all appearances has cease, and the lyield of truit is small and of an inferior quality, it will be far more satiand from a natempt to make them profitably productive by grafting. Grafts may lively moducive by grafting. Grafts may lively moducitive by grafting. Grafts may lively moducities of the lively while from its long and enreful cultiva-tion (only the best specimens being al-lowed to breed), it has a fixily of type that has heretofore been unknown in
