

WOW GIRLS, CUT OFF BY WAR IN FRANCE, REACH HOME SAFELY

Isolated in Breton Village, They Are Held Eighteen Days, Then Make Their Way to Paris.

To be stranded in a seaport town eight hours from Paris, and cut off from communication with the outside world for eighteen days during the experience of the French army, the two Philadelphia girls, Miss Hortense Levy, 1434 North Fifteenth street, and Miss Helen Abraham, 2112 Diamond street, who returned to this city yesterday after a series of exciting experiences within the war zone. They were at a small seaport town named St. Jean du Dolist, in Brittany.

"We were no worse off than the rest of the women of Europe and a great deal more fortunate than the majority," said Miss Levy yesterday in speaking of her experiences. "Everywhere the men have deserted the villages and the women are taking over their labors."

"On August 1 I was attracted to the window of my room by the pitiful crying of a funeral which was being held in a picturesque cemetery across the street. It was while in the midst of this dismal scene that the tones of the tocsin bell broke in, telling that war had been declared. The proclamation calling for mobilization, which was pasted before the mayor's office, was several yards long. It was received at 5 o'clock Sunday evening and at the 6 o'clock church services the next morning the men were present, all of them in the fields hastily harvesting their crops or were on their way to the front."

"During the period of mobilization we were not allowed to leave the town. We had with us little provisions and were cut off from news and friends in the outside world."

"FRENCH WERE COURTEOUS." The French were very courteous to us. Prices were not raised. In fact, the prices on butter and eggs came down. Butter could be bought for 10 cents a pound, because the usual sources of its outlet were cut off. Notices were posted notifying the public that it was a penal offense to raise prices.

"While we were stranded we knew but little of what was going on outside. The men had all left, and all the activity of the town was carried on by the women. We spent considerable of our time sewing for the Red Cross."

"On August 18 we were able to reach Paris after many passports and papers had been signed. The trip took 25 hours, while it usually takes but eight. On the trip to Paris we stopped at La Mons, where the first trainloads of wounded were being brought in."

"At Amiens we saw the arrival of the 75,000 English troops. They displayed the greatest good humor and were singing a popular song, 'Tipperary,' which the natives believed to be their national air. The postage stamps of France, which formerly cost two cents, were selling for three, the extra cent being used for the Red Cross relief work."

"Everywhere we found the wildest excitement. The soldiers go on their way singing, the women hang from their windows and even the wounded do not lose their good humor."

Miss Levy and Miss Abraham arrived on the steamship Finland at New York yesterday. They say that the contention of tourists at London has been relieved and praise the work of the American committee. They had to work their own way with the consent of the British army, but in the French capital they met friends, who assisted them to reach London."

Trains from New York yesterday brought home two Philadelphia families who had come over on the steamship Campania, landing at New York. Mr. C. Hartman Kuhn arrived yesterday evening and is registered for a few days at the Bellevue-Stratford. The other couple were Mr. and Mrs. Morris Darrbaum, of 1901 Spring Garden street.

WAR NEWS IN LETTER. An interesting account of the war conditions in Antwerp and the attack of the German Zeppelins on the city is contained in a letter received by Mrs. H. H. 235 Arch street, from his brother Philippe, who has been attending school in that city.

"Schools, theatres and cafes have been closed," the letter says, "and have been turned into hospitals. Automobiles and motorcycles bear the insignia of the army. Soldiers patrol the streets and all business is suspended. All the soldiers starting for the front are loaded with flowers, cigars, candy and luxuries. The English allies receive ovations whenever they appear on the streets."

WIDESPREAD UNREST THROUGHOUT ITALY

Frequency of Disorders at Home Causes Alarm—Consequences of War Heavy on Budget. A strong light is thrown upon the present condition of affairs in Italy, and upon the decision of the Italian Government to maintain neutrality, in a letter to the New York Evening Post from its Naples correspondent, of which the following is part:

Cerignola is a little city in Apulia, in the south of Italy, between the Appennines and the Adriatic. Yesterday, as certain orators of the Liberal party were speaking in the public square, a bomb burst under the platform of the orators. The news of the event is not as yet precise, but it appears that a poor young man was killed, it is hardly known how. We read already that Cerignola is a "nest of anarchists"; the intervention of the Government is already invoked for making arrests in mass, or, if necessary, setting up some new kind of gallows in the public square.

In large proportions the same thing occurred in the tumults of Romagna and during the days of the general strike and of the threatened railway strike a month ago. I was not in Italy when there took place, on the 7th of last June, the disorders of Ancona, which have been discussed largely by the national and international press. After a private political meeting, about 200 persons, Socialists and Republicans together, in small groups, directed themselves toward one of the city squares, the Piazza Roma. A cord of police had been already placed to bar the way to the crowd. A conflict ensued between the crowd and the police. The policemen say they were hit by stones and by a few shots fired, which last they have not been able to prove; the demonstrators deny it. It is easy to believe that the carabinieri were maltreated by the crowd, just as it is also believable that nothing terrible would have happened if 20 or more persons had been allowed to walk about freely in Piazza Roma, in Ancona, and to shout a few hurrahs and the reverse. * * *

I came back to Italy from a long journey in Greece, and first to Rome, where the general strike had already begun, and then to Ancona, where the same events were in progress. The Conservative and Liberal papers were full of catastrophic accounts; they spoke openly of anti-monarchical plots and of organized revolution. Thus, a great panic spread through all Italy.

Italy can be ruled only by a tyrannical Government, like that of the Pope or of the medieval nobles, or by a strong and laborious democracy, conscious that faith in ideas and in the men that represent it is to Southern peoples not less necessary than the perfect organization of the administration and of the Government.

Certainly, this crisis of growth and this initial distrust in a form of government insufficiently active and operative, according to what most people believe, is the material and spiritual necessities of Italian life, have had their share in the recent disorders.

They have continued to consider and to treat the peasant as they did 50 years ago; they have dominated the local administrations, and have had the Government at their service; law and justice have been almost entirely neglected. Thus, between proprietors and laborers there has risen a barrier over which is sometimes stretched the hand of a madman, armed by a criminal, to fire the fuse of a bomb. The consequences of the war weigh and must continue to weigh heavily on our budget. Italy, having shown herself strong and great in the presence of the whole world, has created new difficulties for herself abroad, and this is another reason for not blinding ourselves about her internal conditions and for not faltering in their origin and cause. * * *

The Italian Government has chosen the direct road of neutrality in the explosion of this homicidal madness of conquest. It is not enough to say that the road chosen is the most loyal, by reason of the honest interpretation of the treaty which binds Italy to Germany and Austria. It must be recognized that this is a duty toward the nation at this moment.
